A Serious Accident.

A sad accident occurred Wednesday evening, when Father Lee, while superintending the fireworks at the picnic of St. Patrick's society, had his face, right hand, and shoulder badly mangled by the explosion of a large cannon firecracker which he held in his hand, but was unaware of its being lighted. The force of the explosion knocked him down, but he was instantly picked up and removed to his residence, and Dr. Fuller was summoned, who, seeing the case to be a serious one, at once sent for Dr. Holbrook of Palmer. Everything was done to relieve the patient's suffering, but it was some time before the extent of his injuries could be learned. The thumb was nearly blown off, and the physicians almost despaired of saving it. There was no hope of saving the first and second fingers, and amputation was necessary. The side of his face and arm were also badly burned and torn. At the time of writing nothing more of his condition could be learned. Meanwhile his friends are waiting and hoping for the best.

Monson's Fourth.

Wednesday was about all that could be desired for the observance of the national holiday. The day was ushered in by the ringing of bells, and the night was made hideous by fish horns, cannons and cannon crackers. About 10 o'clock an alarm of fire was sounded. Engine Co. No. 1 and hook and ladder Co. No. 1 promptly responded, but before they reached the place—Charles Hanson's house on Hampden avenue, the roof being set on fire by a rocket—the fire had been extinguished and the loss was small.

At 9 o'clock the children of St. Patrick's society formed at the church, and, preceded by the Monson Silver Fife and Drum Corps, marched to Reynold's grove, where the society picnic was held. It was estimated that 200 little boys and girls were in line, and a pretty sight they made. At the grove the forenoon was passed in dancing, and in the afternoon the sports were held, consisting of foot, potato and sack races, tug of war and jig dancing, concluding in the evening with a display of fireworks.

The temperance picnic was held on Flynt's park. At 9 o'clock the Sunday schools of the Protestant churches formed at the Methodist church, where the balloon ascensions took place, after which a line of march was formed to the park, where refreshments of all kinds were served. The address of the day was delivered by Rev. A. W. Holt, agent of the Massachusetts Total Abstinence society, followed by readings and declamations and singing. In the afternoon at 3.30 o'clock came the ball game between the business men, most of whom had not played ball for 20 years. Probably the largest crowd that ever witnessed a ball game in this town was present. The two teams were made up as follows: F. E. Morris, captain, C. L. Stiles, Carlos M. Gage, F. M. King, Harry Howe, F. M. Beach, A. Shaw, L. S. Munn; George L. Keeney, captain, A. W. Holt, Hiram Felton, D. M. Needham, A. D. Norcross, James Hale, Charles Peck, William Charles, William King. After battling two hours with the sphere, which was not like the ball they used in former years, and which found several tender spots on their person, they decided to give it up at the fifth inning. During this time there was plenty of leather hunting, the ball being sent in every conceivable direction, while some complained they could not see the ball at all. The most noteworthy feature of the game was the base running of Stiles and Beach, with their 225 avoirdupois. The score at the end of the fifth inning was 33 to 20 in favor of Keeney's side. Charles Keep acted as umpire.

In the evening Slater Bros. gave quite a display of fireworks from the old band stand near Memorial Hall.

WARE AND VICINITY.

In the ball game between the Clippers and Unions at the picnic the Fourth, the Unions won, 11 to 8.

An elaborate piece of scroll sawing is on exhibition in Bassett, the jeweler's window, the work of Charlie Winslow.

A. E. P. Perkins, D. D., will deliver a memorial address on the late William Hyde at the East Congregational church, on Sunday, July 15th.

Joseph Picare, about 16 years of age, had his left eye badly injured the Fourth by having a firecracker thrown into it as he was passing along the street.

There was considerable excitement last Friday over a little dog supposed to be mad. He ran into several stores, frightening the clerks and shoppers, but was killed before doing any further harm.

At a meeting of the directors of the Ware National Bank, William S. Hyde was elected president, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of William Hyde, W. H. Cutler was elected cashier, and D. P. Billings one of the directors.

Fire was discovered in the horse sheds near the East Congregational church soon after one o'clock Wednesday morning, but little damage was done. Supposed to be incendiary, but might have been the result of too free use of firecrackers in the vicinity.

The class of '87 of the Ware high school held a reunion and enjoyed their class dinner at the Mansion House Tuesday evening. The following were present: Clarence L. Roberts, Alfred P. Perkins, Geo. W. Dunham, Harry S. Nye, Nellie Ruggles, Mabel Coney, Anne Fenn, Alice Richardson.

A party of some of the old clerks of Forbes and Wallace, of Springfield, visited Mr. and Mrs. Bryson on the Fourth, a pleasant meeting of those with whom they were associated before going into business here. The clerks and members of their families made up a party of 21, who were given a drive about the town, and returned to their homes with the feeling that Ware was a much larger place than they had supposed.

The county commissioners at their meeting at Northampton Tuesday, granted the Otis Company an abatement of $2000 on the $14,000 tax paid last year, thus ending the long-standing controversy. The trouble commenced in 1886, when the company asked the town assessors to abate their taxes on the basis of an appraisal by their agent. This the assessors refused to do, and the county commissioners sustained their action. Last year the Otis Company protested again, and the town appointed a committee to get an expert appraisal of the property. The report favored the company, but the assessors refusing to recognize their authority, an appeal was made to the county commissioners, with the above result.

A New Directory of Ware and Gilbertville.

R. S. Dillon & Co. are now making a house to house canvass for it, which they assure patrons will surpass in all respects their creditable one published in 1885, as it will contain many additional features. The increase of population, as well as the many changes since that time, makes the work a necessity, and as it will require a great amount of labor and care, it should be well patronized. It is expected the work will be issued in August.

The Glorious Fourth.

Fourth of July, as usual, commenced on the third with a general pandemonium of noises, supposed to be patriotic, which was kept up most of the night. About seven o'clock the antique and horrible parade was ready to move, with music by the Cornet and Cadet bands, but was a very small showing compared to similar processions in years past. Quite a sum had been subscribed to help on the affair. The only attempt at representing or advertising trades was by two saloons, one by a beer shop on wheels, Albert Weiss, dry goods, and a newspaper correspondent. Soon after nine o'clock the crowds had departed to their picnics, and there were less people on the street during the day than on Sundays.

The largest picnic in this vicinity was under the management of St. William's Catholic church, at Eaton's grove. The Methodist society went to Hardwick Pond, the French Evangelical Society was at Sage's Grove, and a large number of private parties in various places.

Joseph, a 13-years-old son of Austin Buiere, had his left hand so mutilated that amputation was necessary, from picking up a big firecracker that he supposed had gone out without exploding. The hand was taken off by Dr. Miner.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

Boston, July 4, 1888.

Boston, in its business portion to-day, is nearly as deserted as on Sunday. Shop doors are closed and the shutters are up. Few people are in the streets, and one is almost as lonely as if he were solitary in the woods, he misses so much the elbowing and jostling crowd. But the flags are flying, and this afternoon the horse cars have been crowded with young fellows and their "best girls," with children and laboring men, all dressed in their Sunday suits and all bent on a good time. The day's sport began early last evening with the killing of a man whose runaway horse was frightened by a fire-cracker, and it was kept up all through the night by constant explosions and unearthly noises. Of course boys will be boys and nobody would have them otherwise, but when it comes to their being savages, it is time to call a halt. "A touch of nature makes the whole world kin," and doubtless Boston's experience is just the same—only there is more of it,—as that of every city and town in the state. If the present mode of celebration is the only way of stimulating love of country, of course we must endure it, for patriotism must be cherished at any price. But it is a revelation of the nature of our patriotism to know that it can only be fostered by prodigious rackets, powder explosions, horn blowing, the shooting off of fingers, large conflagrations and mutilated corpses. Yet that is the price that we pay every year for the Fourth of July celebration. So long as we know before hand what the price is and go into the business with our eyes open, perhaps criticism is out of order. But I have an idea that it would be a check upon the folly if each participant was given to understand beforehand that it would be his mutilated corpse, not some other man's, which was to be a part of the price.

We are gradually learning more of the inside of the Chicago convention. After the recent dinner of the Norfolk club, where some of the returned delegates told of their experience and made their predictions of success, one of them said to me that it seemed absolutely certain on Monday morning that Sherman would be nominated. Such combinations had been made that no doubt was felt that his nomination would be assured on the second ballot. But the Sherman men were not the most powerful part of the convention, and other combinations were formed which made his nomination impossible. In the light of the statements which are made here by men who were in a favorable position to know what was going on, there seems no doubt of the fact that the determination of Sherman not to agree to make Blaine's nomination unanimous was what prevented the nomination of Blaine, and it was the opposition of the Blaine men to Sherman which made Sherman's nomination an impossibility. It will be noticed that the leaders of the Sherman men were prominent members of the "old guard" of Massachusetts Republicans, while the element which defeated them was the same which has distinctly opposed the old guard and tried repeatedly to overthrow it, notably by the election of Congressman Long to the Senate in place of Mr. Dawes. Though the "young men" were defeated in that encounter, yet they have triumphed in this, and now hints are thrown out that an effort is to be made against both Hoar and Beard, to displace the latter from the treasurership and to retire the former from the senatorship, when he comes up for election by the Legislature next January. It would seem as if the exigencies of a campaign ought to unite a party, but there are personal ambitions and revenges to accomplish which are often made paramount to the party's success.

A lively though quiet contest on the surface is being made in the second congressional district for Congressman Long's seat. Dr. Burden, chairman of the Republican state committee, and Councilor Morse are both eager for it. Until recently the latter was confident of success, and he still says that his chances are good, but it is easy to see that he recognizes the seriousness of the situation more and more, and now he says he has to work against the prestige and influence which Dr. Burden enjoys as chairman of the state committee,—all of which is doubtless true. But both of the men come under the current slang definition of "hustlers."

More life continues to be shown in the campaign by the Republicans than by the Democrats. Their headquarters are within two doors of each other on the same side of Washington street, the Republicans' being just opposite the Herald office, and the Democrats' further north. The Republicans are already pushing the campaign, and their plan is to occupy the field and hold it so that when the Democrats have had their hot weather vacation and think it is cool enough for them to go to work, they will find the ground already occupied, and in so strong a force that the contest will already be decided against them. The state committee of the Republicans will meet next Tuesday forenoon to fix the time and place of the big ratification meeting for the Republican nominees, which is still to be held, and will probably occur July 18. No ratification has been held by the Democrats, and they have no idea when it will be. They are sitting quietly down and waiting for the frosts of autumn in order that they may not become heated by political enthusiasm. Both sides profess to be sure of success, but the Republicans expect to work for their victory, while the Democrats seem to expect it will drop into their lap.

It is already evident that the chief issue will be over the reformation of the tariff and its effect upon the wages of employes. The Home Market Club is doing a great deal under the management of Herbert Radcliffe, its secretary, in the way of putting out campaign literature on this point. It has published several large sheets already, and will doubtless send out many others during the campaign, setting forth the protective side of the case, with its probable effect upon laborers in the employment of manufacturers. Both sides will also send out speeches on the tariff by members of congress, and such documents are about all that has been made available for campaign purposes.

Summer life in Boston is at its ebb. So far as the regular dwellers can arrange, they have their cottages at the beach and come and go on the harbor boats, while the family stops at the beach all the time. It is a curious fact, to show how much this summer variation of life is a luxury and not a necessity, that many people in the suburbs who are in the country, practically, as much as if they were in the middle of the state, but with the advantage of nearness to the city, think they must have their vacation as much as the city dwellers. So they rent their houses for three or four months to people from the city who are glad to get that much of a country outing, and go themselves to the beach or to the mountains. Anything for a change is the motto, and it is not so much the need of getting away from close surroundings as it is the desire to go somewhere and do something in the season when it is agreeable to spend most of the time out of doors. So long as this custom prevails it is good proof that the times are not hard, and that that grinding economy is not necessary which was so familiar after the crash of 1873.

What Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has done and is doing for thousands in the cure of Coughs, Colds, Pneumonia, Bronchitis and even Consumption? For this class of complaints, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral stands far ahead of all other specifics.

A TERRIBLE COUGH.

lost flesh rapidly, had night sweats, and was soon confined to my bed. A friend advised the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I began to take this medicine and before finishing the first bottle was able to sit up. Four bottles effected a perfect cure."

CURE OF CANCER AND ULCERS.

Judge T. C. McLendon writes to the Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga., under the date of February 14, 1888: "About three years ago, Jerry Bradley, a colored man, had a cancerous sore on his face, near the right eye. It caused him a great deal of pain, and he lost the sight of the eye, but was finally cured of the cancer by the use of Swift's Specific. This case is well-known in Wilkes Co., Ga., where he lived (near Danbury), and of this case, I, myself, had personal knowledge."

Mr. L. Cox, of Arkabutla, Tate Co., Miss., writes February 24, 1888: "I suffered a great deal from ld ulcers for six years. Your medicine was recommended to me, and after using six bottles, I was completely cured. I never saw its equal as a blood purifier. My neighbors will use no other. Your medicine does even more than you claim for it. I have known it to cure cases which were thought to be hopeless. It is the best medicine made."

Mrs. A. M. Goldsmith, No. 674 Warren St., Brooklyn, N. Y., writes February 22, 1888: "I commenced using S. S. S., about three years ago. I had suffered with a sore throat for over a year, when I commenced using your remedy. I used a great many other remedies with no good results. My little girl also had sore fingers; it commenced from the quick, and then the nails would come off. We doctored her for over two years, and when I commenced using S. S. S., I thought I would see what it would do for me. I am thankful to say that it entirely cured her. It is the best remedy I know of for the blood. I really believe it was the means of saving my life. The doctor told me I had a throat disease similar to General Grant's. I cheerfully recommend it to all suffering from disordered blood. I use it now as a tonic whenever I think I need it."

Mr. B. F. George, Miford P. O., Ellis Co., Texas, writes: "I had a cancerous wart or mole on my eyelid, as large as the end of my thumb, which had the appearance of cancer, from which I suffered a long time. Seeing the S. S. S. advertised I commenced using it, and after the use of a few bottles the sore dropped out, my cancer was gone, and I was entirely relieved."

Mr. G. W. Pettis, of Aiken, S. C., writes: "I was a sufferer from cancer of the breast, and had been under the treatment of five physicians, but it did me no good. It was so bad that I had to stop work. After taking a course of S. S. S. I was entirely cured."

A Bathing Idyl.

Beside the grand old ocean,
She stood in rapt devotion,
And her looks they seemed to grasp some visionary land;
Then she turned about her traces,
One of the barefoot graces,
And her fairy feet retreating, made post-holes in the sand.

High water mark she reached,
And she stood like one bewitched,
And the salt tears trickled past her little nose;
The bath house number she
Had forgotten—misery!
The bewitching creature couldn't find her clothes.

Then all of her devotion
For the nasty, salt old ocean,
Was forgotten in her anger as she swore,
And up the beach she fled,
While her cheeks were flaming red,
And a flannel blouse was all the little darling wore.

AMONG THE PARAGRAPHERS.

A bright, thoughtful boy, one summer day,
Planted an acorn and went his way.
Both grew, as boys and acorns can,
Till one was a tree, the other a man.
Now mark the reward: Along comes the man,
And the tree shelters him, as an oak tree can.
But why stays he there in the moonlight dim?
He stole a fine horse, and was hung to a limb.

A Good Appetite

Is essential to good health; but is often lost owing to the poverty and impurity of the blood and the weakening effect of the changing season. Hood's Sarsaparilla is a wonderful medicine for creating an appetite, toning the digestion and giving strength to the whole system.

"I had been troubled with pimples on my lower limbs, loss of sleep and appetite, and in fact was generally run down. After taking Hood's Sarsaparilla the pimples disappeared, my appetite was renewed, and I feel better in every respect." P. DEVLIN, S. E. corner 10th and Buttonwood Sts., Philadelphia.

"I must say Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best medicine I ever used. Last spring I had no appetite, and the least work I did fatigued me ever so much. I began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, and soon I felt as if I could do as much in a day as I had formerly done in a week. My appetite is voracious." MRS. M. V. BAYARD, Atlantic City, N. J.

SANFORD'S GINGER!

There is something at once touching and beautiful in the contemplation of the universal confidence reposed in SANFORD'S GINGER. And justly so.

With what alacrity it responds to the cry of distress. No cramp or pain or cold or chill has ever made a demand upon it for relief or cure that has not met with instant and grateful response.

It is sure to check any disturbance of the bowels, instantly relieves cramps and pains, prevents indigestion, destroys disease germs in water drunk, restores the circulation when suspended by a chill, a frequent cause of cholera morbus, breaks up colds and fevers, and wards off malarial, contagious and epidemic influences.

Never travel without SANFORD'S GINGER.

A Tap at the Door.

A hand tapped at my door, low down, low down.
I opened it and saw two eyes of brown,
Two lips of cherry red,
A little curly head,
A bonny, fairy sprite, in dress of white,
Who said, with lifted face, "Papa, good-night!"

She climbed upon my knee, and, kneeling there,
Lisped softly, solemnly, her little prayer;
Her meeting finger-tips,
Her pure, sweet, baby lips,
Carried my soul with hers, half unaware,
Into some clearer and diviner air.

I tried to lift again, but all in vain,
Of scientific thought the subtle chain;
So small, so small,
My learning all;
Though I could call each star and tell its place,
My child's "Our Father" bridged the gulf of space.

I sat with folded hands at rest, at rest,
Turning this solemn thought within my breast;
How faith would fade
If God had made
No children in this world—no baby age—
Only the prudent man or thoughtful sage;

Only the woman wise, no little arms
To clasp around our neck; no baby charms,
No loving care,
No sinless prayer,
No thrill of lisping song, no pattering feet,
No infant heart against our heart to beat.

Then if a tiny hand, low down,
Tap at thy heart or door, ah! do not frown;
Bend low to meet
The little feet,
To clasp the clinging hand; the child will be Nearer Heaven than thee—than thee.

AN ÆRONAUT'S STORY.

"Yours is an odd trade."

I made this remark to Mr. Fred Burnett, a traveling acquaintance, as the cars were nearing Toledo. He had told me that he was a professional æronaut. His ascensions, however, were not made for scientific purposes, but as a means of livelihood. For them he received five hundred dollars, and sometimes a thousand dollars a trip.

"Yes sir; an odd and dangerous one," he replied.

"No doubt, especially when a balloon takes fire in the air or collapses. But," I asked, "with judicious management and in favorable weather, is the peril really as great as most people think it is?"

"Every whit," exclaimed the æronaut. I am never in the air an hour that I am not made fully aware in some way that my life is staked, and staked, too, against heavy odds. But the part of the venture that I always dread is the coming down, not the going up; especially coming to earth in a gale of wind, or even in a stiff breeze.

"You see, too, that I am not like a scientist. I must leave the ground on advertised time. When I make an engagement on a Fourth of July or with a menagerie, I must leave at the hour announced, whether the aspect is favorable or not. It won't do to disappoint spectators after they have paid money to satisfy their curiosity. A crowd of people of that sort has neither soul nor reason. They expect you to make the flight, and will hoot and sometimes use violence if it is not made.

"I shall never forget an ascension that I made from Detroit. I was hired for Vance's great circus and caravan. It was on the twenty-third of August. I was to be paid five hundred dollars for the ascent."

"I had with me a young fellow named Ned Eates. Poor Ned! We came to Detroit the evening before with the balloon, a gay little air bubble of about nineteen thousand cubic feet capacity, called the Gypsy Queen.

"It was a bright morning, and we took the Gypsy to the grounds early. A vacant space had been encircled by a rope for us, and the hose connected with the gas pipe of some sort of factory about a hundred yards away. We began to inflate the balloon with coal gas. Common burning gas is used in most of the large towns for this purpose. Pure hydrogen gas is much more expensive and difficult to manufacture, and the coal gas answers almost as well, although the odor is not agreeable.

"It was past eleven o'clock when we ceased to inflate the balloon. Then we allowed her to ascend about thirty feet and there held her to the ground by cords. This was done for an advertisement, to draw a crowd. I think not less than five thousand persons were in that circus. The performance lasted till a little after five o'clock in the afternoon, and then the people streamed out and surrounded the Gypsy.

Meanwhile the weather had changed. I never saw a more ominous sky. The scuds had begun to fly in the south, and every five or ten minutes there would come one of those dreary sighs of wind, which to an æronaut's ear, are as significant as signal guns.

"'Fred,' said Ned to me, as we were hauling the balloon down so we could get into the car, 'what do you think the public hog would say if we should let out the gas and postpone the thing?'

"I replied that I should not care so much for what might be said as for what might be done. A coat of tar and feathers and a general distribution of the Gypsy in little pieces for mementoes would follow our refusal to go up. Go we must if we died for it. That was of no consequence to the crowd.

"'All right,' said Ned, 'but we had better come down at once unless we want to sail in a southwester.'

"I urged Ned not to go with me, the prospect looked so threatening: but he replied:

"'Oh, I'm going. But, Fred, I think we had better insert the words: "if the weather is clear,' in our next advertisement.'

"I thought so, too.

"It was a noisy crowd. Lots of liquor had been drunk, and there was not a spark of pity for us in the mind of a person who was present.

"At a quarter after five the gun was fired. Ned leaned out of the basket.

"'Ladies and gentlemen,' he shouted, 'we are now about to bid you adieu. Good night. I guess you've sent us to our death,' he added in a lower tone of voice, as he turned with a forced laugh to me.

"The line was cut. Gypsy, vaulting from the ground, sailed up like a great white bird to the darkening sky. A shout followed us. Handkerchiefs were waved. We were soon high aloft, out of earshot.

"I had kept the hose on till the last moment, so as to have every inch of the canvas inflated, for, under the most favorable circumstances, I never like to hear the balloon flap, and for the last hour or two I had been convinced that we should be forced across Lake St. Clair before we reached the earth again. So, as I have said, I filled her with gas and took in three sandbags of ballast.

"For two thousand feet we went right up—up—up, almost in a straight line. There seemed to be scarcely a breath of wind. But higher up we could see the scuds flying spitefully, and we were rapidly approaching them. A few hundred feet more were passed and we struck the storm current. The Gypsy ducked and lurched off.

"'Hold on!' Ned shouted, and if we had not held on, we should have gone out of the basket, for we got a tremendous jerk. The balloon bobbed her head and bolted northeast, right out over the straits and the lake. She drew us after her at the rate of sixty miles an hour, and perhaps even faster than that.

"But Lake St. Clair is a goodish bit of water. We were over it till nearly seven o'clock, when the woods and houses on the Canada shore began to come in sight, and we were soon over them.

"'Let's get down,' said Ned, who had been taking a long look at the country. 'There is a large village ahead. Let's try for that and drop as near it as we can.'

"I looked and then pulled the rope of the valve—which, when open, allows the gas to escape—so as to drop the balloon down out of the upper air current in which we were flying. The escape of gas caused the Gypsy to descend. She went sagging down on a long incline, for perhaps a thousand feet, but still continued to fly rapidly forward.

"We had come within eight or nine hundred feet of the earth, and saw, not a little to our consternation, that the wind blew the trees fiercely, and that a strong southeasterly gale was sweeping the ground. The wind was more violent than it had been aloft.

"I knew then that we must encounter some severe bumping, but neither of us anticipated such a gale as that we fell into; for, as we got lower, we were swept on faster and faster.

"At a height of two hundred feet above the trees and fences, we were carried along at certainly twice the speed of a race horse. Fields and farm houses sped under us. We had now and then a passing glimpse of an astonished face turned up toward us.

"'This will never do,' Ned shouted. 'It's death to touch the ground. He pitched out a bag of sand. When it struck the earth, it burst like a shell. I pitched out another.

"Just then we were crossing a road. A horse and wagon, containing a man and woman, were passing. The sand-bag struck the fence, smashing it to splinters. With a horrified glance the passengers plied the whip. We left them bounding away at a gallop.

"The Gypsy vaulted into the air again. The country flew from under us. A heavy mist began to envelop us. Soon drops of rain drove into the air. A stormy night was setting in. The rain and mist saturated the cordage and increased the weight of the ballon, and we again settled toward the earth.

"Our situation can be imagined—flying at such a speed over a country the surface of which could now scarcely be distinguished! One bump against the earth, a house or a rock, would probably be fatal to us.

"'We must try the hooks!' Ned exclaimed.

We had two anchors attached to inch and a half lines that were 200 feet in length. I cast out one of them, and we lay hold of the rope, in expectation of a sudden arrest of our flight. We were slowly settling, and it presently caught on something.

"There was a prodigious jerk, but the obstacle we had hooked gave away. The anchor bounded upward, almost into the car, and we rose again, but only for a moment or two. Then came a series of hitches and jerks as the grapnel dragged after us.

"Fence poles were hooked up. One post flew up almost to a level with our faces. A moment after we went over a farmhouse. The anchor ripped up the eaves and sent the bricks rattling off the chimney. What the people inside thought of the hubbub is more than I know. Ned said they might bless their stars that we had not taken the house with us.

"All at once we heard a splashing. We were passing over a pond. The anchor was dragging in the water. The pond was covered with ducks. They rose with sharp quackings and a tremendous rumble of wings. One flew blindly into the car.

"The next instant we experienced a terrible jerk. The anchor line snapped. The balloon bounced up from the earth. The anchor had caught in a large tree, and the cord had broken like thread! We threw out the other anchor. It was our one hope.

"It had grown very dark and was raining hard. The anchor caught repeatedly, but did not hold. We were carried in this manner several miles. Soon the basket began to graze the tree tops.

"At length we hauled up the line, and found why the anchor did not catch; both flukes were broken off! I cut it loose. The ballon rose a little.

"Ned then tied the anchor-line to our last sand-bag, and we threw that out, hoping it might hitch round something. Evidently we were over a forest. I could hear the heavy bag crushing through the boughs.

"Suddenly we felt an awful jerk. The car lurched downward and struck heavily against something. Though we had to hold fast the shock wrenched our hands from the ropes. I was hurled forward, and struck amid a mass of wet brush, at which I clutched desperately. It bent downward, but I held on, and it supported me.

"At the same instant I heard Ned cry out, as if hurt. The balloon was violently beating against what seemed to be branches. I could hear the silk ripping, and smelt the escaping gas.

"Very cautiously I felt about. Getting hold of the larger boughs, I found that I was in a treetop. In a short time I was able to climb downward, and soon slide to the ground. It was some kind of an evergreen—a large spruce, I think.

"As soon as I reached the ground, I shouted to Ned. No answer followed. I groped about, but could not find him. Lighting matches—I always carry them in my pocket—I searched beneath the trees near by, and came upon the poor fellow lying upon his side senseless, about forty feet distant, where he had fallen.

"As quickly as possible, I collected brush and branches of trees, and after much difficulty kindled a fire. Ned was breathing faintly.

"By chafing him and by the aid of cordial from my flask, I brought him to consciousness in about ten minutes. But he groaned pitably, and now discovered that his left leg was broken above the knee. He was dreadfully shaken up otherwise, having been thrown thirty or forty feet to the ground.

I never was in such a quandary as to what I ought to do. His leg should be set at once; but if I started for help in the darkness, I was as likely to go further into the woods as to find a settlement.

"Well, sir, what I did do was first to build a better fire, then cut some splints, and tear the linings of my coats into bandages, and set that leg myself.

"Of course I hurt him fearfully. He cried and groaned in a way that cut me to the heart. I straightened and got the bones into position as best I could; then I kept the fire burning brightly, and stayed by him till morning.

"When it had at last grown light, I climbed a tree and tried to get some idea of the country. The Gypsy hung in the tree-tops a wreck. The gas had all escaped and the canvas was badly torn.

"I got the hatchet from the car, and leaving Ned as comfortably placed as possible, set off, 'blazing trees' as I went. I had seen something that looked like a clearing, to the southeast, and started for that, using my pocket compass. I thought I went at least nine or ten miles before I came out of the woods to a house— a shanty of French Canadians.

"There I gathered a company of five men and went back for Ned. We got him to the shanty a little before sunset. But it was not till the next afternoon that I could get a doctor from the village of Sangertown, seventeen miles below, to visit him.

"The leg was by that time so swollen and sore that the physician did not think it advisable to reset it, and it never was reset. It got well in time, and is now a pretty good leg.

The Gypsy was an entire loss to me; I never got even the silk and ropes out of the woods. She was worth about a thousand dollars. So, you see, that I did make much out of that trip to Detroit.

AFRAID OF CONTAMINATION.

Star Tuckerman, a well-known pioneer resident of Minneapolis was much given to fishing, hunting, and whist playing. For many years Mr. Tuckerman boarded at the Brigham honse and frequently Mr. Brigham officiated as his partner, but was not regarded as a conscientious adherent to the rules of whist. One day while the two were spending a few leisure hours in their favourite amusement, Mr. Tucker's dog was sleeping sweetly between their legs. In the course of events Mr. Brigham made a transparent blunder which excited Mr. Tuckerman's fiercest wrath. Rising from the table he gave his dog a kick and exclaimed: "Get out of here! Get out of here! I don't want you around where there is such a —— as that."—St Paul Pioneer Press.

Milk heated to much above 100 degrees Farenheit loses for a time a degree of its sweetness and density. No one who, fatigued by over exertion of body or mind, has ever experienced the reviving influence of a tumbler of this beverage, heated as hot as it can be sipped, will willingly forego a resort to it because of its being rendered somewhat less acceptable to the palate. The promptness with which its cordial influence is felt is, indeed, surprising. Some portion of it seems to be digested and appropriated almost immediately, and many who now fancy that they need alcoholic stimulants when exhausted by fatigue will find in this simple draught an equivalent that will be abundantly satisfying and far more enduring in its effects.

My Little Bo Peep.

My little Bo Peep is fast asleep,
And her head on my breast is lying,
I gently rock and the old hall clock
Strikes a knell of the day that's dying;
But what care I how the hours go by,
Whether swiftly they go or creeping?
Not an hour could be but dear to me
When my babe on my arm was sleeping.

Her little bare feet, with dimples sweet,
From the folds of her gown are peeping,
And each wee toe, like a daisy in blow,
I caress as she lies a-sleeping.
Her golden hair falls over the chair,
Its tresses of beauty unfolding,
I press my lips to her finger-tips
That my hands are so tightly holding.

Tick, tock, tick, tock; you may wait, old clock,
It was foolish what I was saying;
Let your seconds stay, your minutes play,
And bid your days go all a-Maying.
Old Time! stand still—let me drink my fill
Of content while my babe is sleeping;
As I smooth her hair, my life looks fair,
And to-morrow—I may be weeping.

STYLES IN PAPER AND PENMANSHIP.

The lately accepted method of letter writing has been to write first upon the first page and then the last, then second and third. This prevents the accident of turning two sheets and writing on both. An objection to writing on the last page is that the contents of the letter may easily be read through the envelope.

A few years ago it was fashionable to write on thin cross barred paper, each way of the page, consequently a sheet of four pages really did duty for eight. Not only was this in poor taste, but it was an imposition to ask our friends to decipher such hieroglyphics as the penmanship of everybody became under such a process.

The extreme of anything is bad form. So of the exaggerated style of English penmanship; it is sometimes almost an insult to send such chirography to a very busy person, because it is next to impossible to decipher it. The writing might as well be Chinese characters, as, indeed, some of it looks. One should not cultivate what is called by that hackneyed name of "style" at the expense of legibility. The first duty in writing to any one is that the contents shall consume as little of the receiver's time as possible. For this reason a plain round hand is decidedly the best; of course the next thing is to be concise.

To write on only one side of the paper is a good rule for any one to follow. In writing a note or letter then, write on the first page, then on the third, and if there is still more to be written return to the second page, writing lengthwise of the paper. It is better, however, in all cases to use the second and fourth pages of a letter.

Our forefathers were particularly neglectful in this. One who owns a large collection of autograph letters of Revolutionary heroes, in showing them bemoaned the fact that both sides of the paper were written upon, as it prevented the letters being glued upon the page of a scrap book. Valuable letters were almost in shreds, because there was no suitable way of securing them. All who are the least likely to become famous should bear this in mind.—Paper World.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

The following hearing, which occurred at the Central station to-day, presented some novelties that are worth recording:

"What's your name?" asked Magistrate Smith, in his most explosive tones, as a yellow-skinned knight of the flat-iron stood up in the dock.

"Dam You," responded John Washeeman, in his blandest voice.

"Wh-what's that?" chokingly screeched the irate magistrate.

"Dam You," repeated the oblique-eyed Oriental, with a chopstick smile spreading his mouth from ear to ear.

"How dare you swear at this court, sir?" almost gasped the horrified dispenser of ex parte justice, "What do you mean, sir?"

"Dam You, allee samee," responded John with no more expression on his face than there is in a plate of boiled rice before it is amalgamated with milk and sugar.

Just at this juncture Clerk Moffet placed his white horse moustache close to the right-angled ear of his honor and whispered.

"Oh! Ah! I see!" exclaimed the mollified magistrate, as he sighed out his pent-up indignation, and the red corpuscles displaced the apoplectic purple that had taken possession of usually ruddy cheeks. "I'll hold you, Dam You, for a further hearing to-morrow. Adjourn the court."—Philadelphia Press.

The Girl's Conclusion.—One never hears of an event so sad but that some element of humour lurks about it. A little girl who lives on State street near the dentist's office where a shooting affray occurred, happened to hear the pistol shots and shouts for the police. Revolving it for a moment in her baby mind, a plausible explanation seemed to dawn upon her, and turning to her father, she remarked: "He must have pulled a wrong tooth for somebody."—Albany (N. Y.) Journal.

Enterprising agent—"I am the agent of the Anti-Matrimonial society, Miss. Our object is to discourage hasty marriages." Omaha girl—"That's real good of you." "Yes, you see you pay us $5 a month as long as you remain single, and if you live to be 60 without marrying, we give you $20,000, enough to live on." "Dear me, $20,000!" "But if you marry you lose everything." "Well, here is the first five. If I should marry I would lose all I paid in and the $20,000 too, wouldn't I?" "Every cent of it." "Mercy me! I hope nobody will ask me."

NOVELTIES IN JEWELY.

Large silver gilt berry scoops are much sought after.

The most fashionable picture frames are of oxidized silver.

Jewelry of gold and coral combined is beginning to appear.

Fans with filigree gold sticks are to do service this summer.

Hairpins representing large gold feathers are coming into vogue.

Hairpins are being worn headed with large opaque amber blocks.

The newest parasols have hammered silver animals' heads for handles.

Gold book clasps ornamented with enamel flowers are something decidedly new.

A large spray of silver lilies of the valley make a pleasing ornament for the hair.

An odd pair of earrings take the form of diminutive gold ewers, delicately chased.

One of the newest rings is set with a cat's eye and a diamond, both of the same size.

Some of the costliest dresses, this season, have expensive jewels left in here and there.

Nickel shoe horns with twisted handles of frosted silver seem to take the eye just now.

A row of tiny black pearls set between two gold knife edge bars forms a beautiful bracelet.

A curious looking chain of late pattern is composed of small nugget gold bricks hooked together.

Something uncommon as a necklace is a string of small mottled amber balls representing peas.

Immensely popular is the new jewelry known as blended gold and silver, which was lately introduced.

A novel scarf pin of recent manufacture is a trilope of black enameled openwork set with diamonds or pearls.

Watches are occasionally seen with the back case covered with graduated half pearls, imparting a very rich effect.

Earrings have been noticed in the form of tiny gold bird cages. They are pretty enough to catch the feminine fancy.

Jewelers are now showing queer chains of four massive dull gold links, and bearing a strong resemblance to men's chains.

An odd design in cane handles is a large block of etched ivory resting upon one of its points and applied with gold flowers.

The hight of extravagance has been reached by society belles, some of whom fasten their shoes with diamond-studded clasps.

A magnificent brooch seen recently was a bar of matchless diamonds, and from each stone was suspended a smaller diamond.

The latest European freak is an immense gold locket about two inches in diamater, made to imitate alligator skin and having a fine large ruby set in the center.

A prominent leader of fashion recently sported a watch the case of which was plain black enamel. It was the most unostentatious looking timepiece ever seen.

Among the recent importations is a magnificent brooch in the form of a large thistle, the leaves being of polished gold and the bud of white onyx completely covered with small brilliants.

Quite a handsome lace pin shown recently was composed of six small dull gold palettes, overlapping each other, with a different colored piece of enamel on each palette to represent paint.

Mexican moonstone brooches, both cameo and intaglio, are out in new and pleasing styles. The same exquisite tints of pink, blue, yellow and green that were so popular last season, appear in, if possible, greater delicacy than ever. The settings are of handsome scroll work.

Some very handsome brooches of enameled open work in various colors are being shown by a prominent manufacturer. In shape they are round, oval, heart shaped or odd, and diamonds, pearls and turquoises are liberally used in their ornamentation. The harmony of colors produced is exquisite.—Jewelers' Review.

In the quaint Pennsylvanian community of Economy every inhabitant is compelled to rigidly conform to somewhat exacting rules. Every one is required to attend church twice every Sunday and hear two sermons from Father Henrici. Any one found out of bed after nine o'clock on any night is immediately banished from the town, and all are required to rise at that poetic and lyric hour, "five o'clock in the morning." In addition to three of the squarest possible square meals daily, a free luncheon is served to the whole community at nine o'clock every morning and at three every afternoon, and at each of those hours a pint of wine is meted out to every man, woman and child.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, JULY 13, 1888.

PRESIDENT DIAZ of Mexico has been reëlected for another term.

THE poet Whittier heartily endorses the Republican platform and candidates, and believes they will be elected.

GOV. AMES appears to be a pretty sick man, more so than his friends like to admit. It is to be hoped that his illness may take a more favorable turn soon.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND declaims against Mormonism, but refuses to reappoint Judge Zane, the one judge whom the Mormons fear and hate, and nominates for his place an untried New York lawyer.

SPEAKER NOYES removes any doubt as to his position by announcing through a communication to the Boston Journal that he is a candidate for the governorship. This will be pleasant news to Gov. Ames. The more candidates, the better his chance of a renomination.

PITCHER, the defaulting teller of the Union Bank of Providence, R. I., expected to buy immunity from punishment, with his big boodle, and coolly proposed to compromise for $150,000, but his scheme miscarried, the missing securities, amounting to $700,000, having been found. He had shipped them to London under an assumed name.

GEN. SHERIDAN arrived at Nonquit Sunday afternoon, and is comfortably fixed in his cottage. The general's trip calls to mind the journey of President Garfield to the seashore in search of the health which never came to him, but in the present case the doctors express the belief that their patient will recover,—a belief which everybody will be glad to see realized.

DEMOCRATIC love for tariff reform is wisely tempered by regard for party expediency. In the House, Monday, the Republicans tried to reduce the tariff on sugar one-half, or from 82 to 41 per cent, but the Democrats voted solidly in favor of the rate provided in the Mills bill—68 per cent—for Louisiana must be kept in good humor, whether the workingman gets his sugar cheaper or not.

BOSTON Protestants are becoming thoroughly aroused over Catholic interference in the public schools, as illustrated in the discarding of Swinton's history because of its outline of Roman Catholic doctrines, and the matter is being aired pretty thoroughly, two largely attended public meetings being held Wednesday, when a committee was appointed to bring the matter before the voters of the state.

CONGRESSMAN DAVIS of Fall River announces that he will not be a candidate for reëlection. This matter is really becoming serious. As it now stands Messrs. Long, Collins, Hayden, Russell, Whiting and Davis, a full half of our delegation, will retire, and it will be a difficult matter to select half a dozen new men who can make their places good right away. Enough will be found ready to try it, however.

CIVIL SERVICE REFORMERS will find a man of their own heart in Gen. Harrison. When in the United States Senate he supported the Pendleton bill heartily, and in a speech some six years ago he said:—

> I want to assure you to-night that I am an advocate of civil service reform. My brief experience at Washington has led me often to utter the wish, with an emphasis I do not often use, that I might be forever relieved of any connection with the distribution of public patronage. I covet for myself the free and unpurchased support of my fellow citizens, and long to be able to give my time and energy solely to those public affairs that legitimately relate to the honorable trust which you have committed to me.

A FRESH chapter in the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy strike has developed the past week, in the arrest of three or four engineers, with Chairman Hoge of the grievance committee of the brotherhood of engineers, and Chairman Murphy of the same committee in the fireman's organization, on the charge of plotting to destroy the property of the railroad. Two clerks of Hoge have made a confession, charging him with the authorship of a secret circular requesting brotherhood engineers to hire themselves secretly to the Burlington road and them disable engines by the use of sal soda and emery.

IT is amusing to see the great ado that is being made over the "free whisky" plank in the Republican platform. This is what it says:—

> If there shall still remain a larger revenue than is required for the wants of the government, we favor the entire repeal of the internal taxes rather than the surrender of any part of our protective system at the joint behest of the whisky trusts and agents of foreign manufacturers.

In order to fully appreciate the "free whisky" policy of the Republicans, one must compare the above with the platform of the Prohibitory party, adopted the last of May, which declares

> For the immediate abolition of the internal revenue system, whereby our national government is deriving support from our greatest national vice.

—Rather queer, isn't it, that Republicans and Prohibitionists alike should be working so harmoniously for "free whisky"? But, by the way, what party is it that is constantly at warfare with the saloon; which enacts all the temperance legislation that is put on the statute book in every Northern state, including high license and prohibitory laws? Not the Democratic party, by long odds, but the "free whisky" Republican party. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

Gen. Harrison and myself commanded brigades in the same division during a part of the late war. I know him to have a most brilliant record as a soldier. In his hands as president the republic which his valor helped to save will be safe, whether its flag shall be insulted from abroad or its best interests shall be threatened by ignorance, malice or indifference at home. Against Cleveland at Buffalo let us match Harrison at Resaca and Peach Tree Creek; against free trade and our markets for Great Britan, let us take up the lance for America for Americans, and who can doubt but that Democracy will meet its second Appomattox at the polls in November.—Congressman Cogswell.

Only 33 persons were killed, so far as known, on all the English railways last year. Crossing at grade is forbidden by law, the railways are generally railed off from the highway, and at stations the passing is over the tracks by an archway.

Damage by Lightning.

During the storm of Wednesday night the Baptist church was struck by lightning about 11, and damaged to the extent of about $500, which is fully covered by insurance. The bolt evidently struck the lightning rod on the spire and followed it down to the roof, where, instead of continuing to the ground it left the conductor and passing through a small pinnacle ran down the edge of the roof, ripping up the shingles, to the minaret on the south-east corner, toward the Weeks House. It followed this corner to the ground, tearing off clapboards and inside planks, throwing some of them a distance of nearly 75 feet. On its way down the bolt seemed to divide, and a portion passed into the furnace room, tearing out the under side of the winding stairway to the audience room above, and throwing pieces of plastering through several windows. It then followed the stovepipe some thirty feet without damage to the class room in the rear of the building, where it scorched the wall-paper badly, and after turning two corners passed out on a water pipe. Another division was made in the furnace room, and a branch passed up through the floor into the audience room above and into the gallery, where pieces of plank were torn off and thrown the whole length of the church. An alarm of fire was rung in from box 63, and the department was on hand in a very few minutes, but fortunately the building was not set on fire, and there was no need of their services.

Base Ball.

NORTHAMPTON FIREMEN 5; PALMERS 4.

The Palmers and Northampton Firemen played a good game on the grounds of the latter club last Saturday, in the presence of about 500 people. The battery work of both teams was faultless, each pitcher striking out eleven men. The Palmers were weak in the outfield, as usual, and Cotter and Kane were given poor support, which, with their inability to hit Keating safely, lost the game. McGrath and Betts were unable to play, and Lines of Monson and Martin Rooney of Palmer were the substitutes, but failed to do any batting, which was just what was wanted to have won the game. Shackley and Kane were badly disabled before the game, but volunteered to play. The following is the score by innings:

| INNINGS. | 1 | 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 | 9 | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| N. Firemen, | 0 | 0 | 3 | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 1 | 0 | —5 |
| Palmers, | 2 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 1 | 1 | 0 | —4 |

DIAMOND POINTERS.

The diamond on the park needs reconstructing.

Greene will play with the Palmers for the remainder of the season.

Reports of the results of the National League games are now received here before six p. m.

The Wide-Awakes won last Saturday's game from the nine representing the wire mill, the score standing 36 to 8.

The Palmers have played eleven games this season and lost four of them. Last season the club played seventeen games and lost three.

The Palmers have been playing poor ball of late, and unless there is some change in the management of the nine interest in the game locally will decrease.

The majority of the games played on the park this season have been fairly well attended, and the receipts have been sufficient to cover the expense incurred in running the team.

It is evident that base-ball is not quite as popular here this season as it was last. Then the town was represented by thirteen organized teams, while this season there are only seven.

The Palmers have defeated every team that it has been defeated by this season, with the exception of the Three Rivers and Actives of Chicopee Falls, with whom no return games have yet been played.

The Palmers will probably meet the Chicagos on the park before the season ends, as one of the local business men and base ball enthusiasts is corresponding with Captain Anson for a date when his team comes East again.

The Electric Light.

SOMETHING ABOUT THE THOMSON-HOUSTON SYSTEM INTRODUCED IN TOWN.

After many months of labor and unavoidable delay, the streets are lighted by electricity. During the time the plant has been in construction a good deal of comment has been occasioned by the slow progress made, and by the delay in the arrival of the engine and other apparatus, but when one takes the pains to investigate it will be found that a large amount of work has been done, and in such a thorough and workman-like manner as to be highly commended by everybody, and therefore delays at times have been necessary.

The streets were lighted Monday evening for the first time in the history of the town, and it will long be remembered by the citizens as passing from darkness into light. Crowds were out that evening, and every arc light had its admirers, while at the station could be seen another large assembly of the curious, watching the dynamos and commenting upon the easy-running machinery. The streets of the village are well lighted, and after the lamps have been run a while longer and the people get accustomed to them, they will wonder how they ever got along without them. There is occasionally a place where the trees are thick that is a little dark, but generally speaking the brilliant rays of the lights connect, so there is very little ground that remains in utter darkness. It is thought that some of the lights may have to be relocated, and possibly one or two more added, making a total of twenty-six in the village. The steadiness of the arc lights is favorably spoken of by everyone who has any comments to make, for in Springfield, and the larger cities and towns, where different and not so well-known systems are in use, they are constantly flickering, which makes it dazzling and unsatisfactory to the eye. The Thomson-Houston system is acknowledged to be the standard and the finest in the world, and more towns and cities in the United States are lighted by it than by any other.

The electricity for the incandescent alternating system is supplied by one large and one small dynamo, with a capacity of over 500 16-candle-power lamps. These dynamos were made at the works of the Westinghouse electric company, and are superior to any in use to-day for incandescent lighting. The incandescent circuit at present comprises about 109 lamps of 20-candle power, which is four candle-power in excess of those generally used in other towns and cities of New England.

The manner of lighting a store or business place may be described as follows: At the top of one of the windows in the building to be lighted, two holes are bored, some six inches apart, through to the outside of the structure, then a fuse box is fastened to the inside. From this box one wire is trained downward until it comes in contact with a switch placed there to receive it, and where it is connected in such a manner that the lights can be shut off at any time. Then two wires are strung through the center of the store, or over the counters if desired; these are known as the main store wires, and by means of the fuse box are connected with the main wires upon the outside of the structure, where the transformers or converters are to be located. These transformers are iron boxes attached to the outside of the buildings. Two wires from the main line are fastened to two other wires attached to the transformer, and two more wires are connected from the transformer to the wires which enter the store. A greater portion of the current from the main wire then passes to the transformer, where it is reduced by means of still larger wires and the quantity increased if desired before entering the stores. The incandescent wires in the stores are so arranged that in case a lamp fails or a small wire is broken, the other lamps continue to give light, notwithstanding. Each lamp is suspended from the main wires in the stores by means of a flexible silk cable of whatever length may be desired, and can be adjusted easily if it works improperly. There is absolutely no danger of accident resulting from the incandescent wires in the stores, as they are all thoroughly insulated. To remedy the danger of fire in case a wire happens to be short circuited, there are interposed in every circuit, or branch circuit, what are called fuses, or "weak points," made of small wire composed of parts of lead and tin, fusible at a degree of heat slightly above that called for by the lamps, and considerably below that which the wire is capable of carrying without heating. If for any reason an excess of current should be caused to pass through the circuit the heat generated will melt the fuse and open the circuit, thus preventing danger from fire.

The cost of the electric light is of first importance to business men, but it can be truly said that in the majority of cases it is cheaper than gas and far superior to that or kerosene oil. The method now is to contract to furnish a certain number of lamps to be run a certain number of evenings each week for a certain amount per annum. The leeway is so large that the business men can light up their establishments on a dark afternoon and not be obliged to pay extra, although an ingenious device, called the ampere-meter, is used at the station to determine the amount of electricity used over the circuit. The cost of one lamp, 20-candle-power, to be used every evening in the week, will be $10 per annum, while it costs $10 per annum at Ware for a light to be used only three evenings a week, and $12 per year for every evening. This schedule of prices is comparatively cheap. Take for example the prices paid in the city of Springfield, where the 16-candle-power lamp is used; the charge for one night in each week is $7, while if it is used every night the charge is $11 per year. Special prices are made to parties who do not use their lamps very often. The 16 candle-power lamps are used to light private residences, etc., and give a brilliant light.

There is a marked difference between the arc lamps used upon the streets of the village and the new incandescent lamps with which the majority of people are not familiar. The arc light is supplied from a straight current, while the electricity for the incandescent lamp is from an alternate current. In the arc light there are two carbon rods, slightly separated. The current jumps from one to the other, generating intense heat, which produces light by maintaining the points of the carbon at what is called white heat. With the incandescent system, the passage of a current of electricity is opposed by the resistance of a conductor, and in passing it generates heat. If the resistance is properly proportioned sufficient heat is generated to maintain the conductor at white heat. In the incandescent lamp of the new system, a conductor made of carbonized bamboo is enclosed in a glass bulb from which the air has been exhausted. These lamps are connected by wires of copper of sufficient size to prevent them from being heated by the current passing through them, while the conductor or filament in the lamp is brought to a white heat.

The new system of wiring stores, which has been adopted here, is a great improvement on the system formerly used, for by the new process any lamp or quantity of lamps is connected by a wire running directly to and from the station. The features of the new alternating system as compared with the old system are the use of the alternate current instead of the direct current, the high pressure instead of the low pressure, and a small quantity of electricity on the main wires instead of a large quantity. By this system the current can be distributed at a small cost for copper, and to long distances without a loss of more than 2 per cent, while with the direct current for the same distance, the loss is as high as from 12 to 15 per cent. In both cases similar lamps are used, but to do so the current is changed by the converters.

Many of the stores and business places in the village are already lighted by the incandescent system, and the probability is that more will fall into line and use the system in place of the kerosene lamp. The following is a list of the places that have the incandescent system, and the number of lamps in each place: C. K. Gamwell, 16; Converse House, 28; Nassowanno House, 19; F. L. Pierce, 2; Joseph Provost, 2; H. W. Tracy, 6; Sears and Cook, 10; W. R. Milligan, 1; F. D. Barton, 1; John O'Connor, 2; E. Goodes, 1; A. E. Park, 2; Read & Hearn, 1; Ching Teong (Chinese Laundry), 1; Dr. G. H. Wilkins, 3; stock exchange, 1; J. J. Moynahan, 2; J. T. Lynch, 2; F. J. Wassum, 3; E. L. Davis, 3; F. C. Hatch, 2. Besides the above, C. L. Saunders will have 3 in his place of business; Dwyer and Sullivan, 3; T. J. Chalk, 5; Brown & Abbe, 3; S. L. Ferry, 3; John Feeney, 2; while there are others who will doubtless have them put in later. It is expected that the union passenger station will also be lighted, as a contract is already pending. The station will require about 115 incandescent lights, if it is decided to use those instead of the arc, but it is quite probable that both kinds will be used there, and if such is the case, it will reduce the number of incandescent lamps. The Second Congregational and St. Paul's Universalist churches will also have the light put in, providing it gives satisfaction after a sufficient test. C. K. Gamwell and Sears & Cook have the best lighted stores in town. There is a probability that the Weeks House and the state primary school will have the new system of lights before long.

The site upon which the station is located was purchased of John M. Converse for $1000, and is an especially desirable one, being situated just south of the tracks of the New London Northern Railroad and the union passenger station. The structure was erected by George W. Lyman of this place at a cost of about $2100, exclusive of the masonry work, which was done by H. W. Leach & Co. of Boston, at a cost of about $1500. The wood-work was begun about Feb. 10 and finished about April 15, some additions having been made since then. The dimensions of the engine room are 36 by 37 feet, while the boiler room is about 23 by 36 feet. In the second story of the building there is a storage room and sleeping apartment, while recently there has been an addition built upon the boiler room, in which is stored the coal. Upon the first floor is located the two incandescent dynamos of the Westinghouse system, and the 50-arc-light dynamo of the Thomson-Houston make, together with the engine of 100 horse-power, made by the Armington & Sims Manufacturing Co. of Providence, R. I., and furnished by the Jarvis Engineering Co. of Boston. The boiler in use was built by William Allen of Worcester, and is about 100 horse-power. The steam pump was supplied by the Dean Steam Pump Works of Holyoke, and in case it should give out, its place could be supplied by an injector. The engine will make about 326 revolutions per minute, and is almost noiseless in its operation. The station is an exceptionally fine one throughout, it being 60 feet long, 36 feet wide and two stories high. There is sufficient room to add another engine, boiler and dynamo in case it should be desired to furnish the surrounding towns and villages with electricity for street or inside lighting. Expert electricians state that the station here is the largest and best equipped of any in New England, considering the size of the place, it costing almost three times as much as the one at Ware. The work of constructing the entire plant was in charge of George T. Whittier, an expert electrician of the Thomson-Houston Electric Company, the whole being superintended by Thomas T. Robinson of Boston, one of the general agents of the same company. It is estimated that the entire plant will cost in the vicinity of $30,000 when entirely completed.

After the lights have been given a satisfactory test, a proposition will be submitted by the company to the fire district relative to the amount to be paid per year for the lights and the number of hours per night which they shall be run.

This is the largest order the company has ever received at one time, and they are running their quarry at the utmost capacity, and are shipping about 20 car-loads a day.

The Universalist society and Sunday-school will have their annual picnic at Evergreen Park, State Line, next Thursday. The party will go down on 8.44 train in the morning, and can return on either of the evening trains. The special town meeting was held in Memorial Hall Saturday afternoon, to chose selectmen and overseers of the poor to fill vacancies caused by the resignation of Carlos L. Peck and George H. Newton. Town Clerk Gage called the meeting to order, and R. M. Reynolds was chosen moderator. The town refused to accept the resignation of Mr. Peck, believing the best interests of the town demanded his continuation in office. G. H. Newton's resignation was accepted as his ill health would not permit of his serving any longer. Alvin A. Gage was chosen his successor, receiving 76 of the 84 votes cast.

The assessors have completed their work, which shows the following figures: Valuation of personal property in town, $345,119; real estate, $1,143,703; total, $1,488,911. The value of buildings is $735,450, and of land $408,343. The amount of the town appropriations is $21,800, county $1881, and state $2025. The militia enrolment is 537 men. There are 483 school children, and 205 dogs on which license is paid, but this does not cover the number of dogs in town. Tax Collector Potter has his book of taxes made up, and all those paying their taxes before August 1st will be allowed a discount of 5 per cent.

The heavy shower which passed over this place Wednesday night was the nearest to a tornado that Monson has had for many years. A strong wind had been blowing all of the evening, but about 10.30 a small black cloud was observed to pass directly over the village from northwest to southeast, and was accompanied by a high wind and vivid lightning. Large trees were torn up by the roots or had their branches or tops torn off by the force of the wind, and small buildings were overturned and sheds demolished. Some large shade trees on Main street were broken down, doors and blinds were taken from their hinges and carried away. A large shed at F. E. Lemon's farm at South Monson was torn to pieces, and J. W. Stebbins's large new barn was somewhat damaged. The path of the storm is marked by broken and twisted trees, some with trunks a foot or more in diameter being broken like pipe stems. Fruit trees were badly damaged in all parts of the town, and crops of all kinds were laid flat and will suffer considerably.

At the special meeting of the fire district held in Firemen's hall Monday afternoon, $500 was voted in addition to the $1000 already voted to build and furnish the new hose house.

A party of ten is expecting to leave Ware next Monday for a vacation at Block Island. They are Benjamin Brown, George H. Coney and C. W. Eddy, with their families, and Herbert Turner.

Geo. H. Coney furnishes the lumber and will superintend the remodeling of the East Congregational church. Work has already commenced excavating for the cellar, under the direction of Mr. Lyman, the stone mason and contractor.

The Otis Company is remodeling the interior of the office building. In the northwest corner is to be a large room for the transaction of business connected with the mills, and the telephone, etc, will be located there. The other rooms will remain much the same as at present.

William N. Hoyt was arraigned in the municipal court in Boston last week on the charge of publishing a false, scandalous, malicious and defamatory libel on James Anderson of Springfield, an agent of Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruely to Animals, in mailing to Gov. Ames the following letter:

> WARE, June 4, 1888.
>
> Hon. Oliver Ames: Dear Sir—I would like to know if there is a state society for the prevention of cruelty to animals, and if so, where are its headquarters? There is a man by the name of Anderson (who claims to be the agent of that society) who is going about this section extorting from $2 to $6 from each victim, and then kills his horse, and with seeming disregard for value. He seems to select the most ignorant for victims. Is there no remedy? And has he any lawful right to kill a creature without remunerating the owner? He uses threats to carry out his fiendish work when necessary. Please inform me upon the matter and oblige. Respectfully,

> Newspaper correspondent, Box 140. I await an early answer.

The case was continued until this week Monday, when Judge Parmenter said: "That the statements are libelous there is no doubt; but on the question of truth and malicious intent there is so much conflict of evidence that it was beyond the jurisdiction of the court to decide, and the case must go to the higher court for determination by a jury, especially since it is one of much importance both to the plaintiff and the defendant." He accordingly held Hoyt in $1000 bonds for next Monday at 11 a.m.

A CARD.—The members of Palmer Steamer Co. No. 1, Hook and Ladder Co. No. 1, and the officers of the Fire Department desire to express their sincere thanks to the Woman's Relief Corps for the flag presented them July 3d.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, July 11, 1888.

Speaker Noyes's card in the Journal of this morning that he is a candidate for the Republican nomination for governor puts an end to the talk that he is out of the field, but it does not by any means indicate that he has any strength to speak of. Rarely can a man be found who favors the speaker for the governorship, and yet Mr. Noyes talks about the "tremendous undercurrent" which there is for him. To one not in the movement the whole affair seems ridiculous, and I fancy that if Noyes was not prospective speaker of the next House, with the committee positions to apportion, which, he says, "are my stock in trade," he would not have half the support he does.

Gov. Ames is undoubtedly very sick. He gets no natural sleep at all, but is obliged to use opiates for whatever he does get. He sees no one but his physicians and family, reads no papers, and is weak. He does not gain at all, and the case is serious. His physician, Dr. F. I. Knight of Boston, was put in charge of him by his regular physician, J. P. Oliver, who went to Europe the Monday after the governor was taken ill, not supposing that the case was so serious. Nothing is done by the governor's friends politically, and so the opportunity is excellent for the Draper men to get in their work.

A large number of teachers and other educators went from here to Newport Monday afternoon and Tuesday forenoon to attend the forty-ninth annual meeting of the American Institute of Instruction, which has been in progress there during the week. The quotation from John Gilpin's ride may be adapted to the case of these teachers—that, though on pleasure bent, they have a frugal mind. Pleasure, I think, and not instruction, is the prime object of the gathering. And why should it not be so? The pedagogues have been shut up in school for a long time, and here is an opportunity afforded for a capital outing at a moderate expense. Financially there are several interesting phases to this gathering. In the first place, the Institute must make money enough to pay its expenses. So it selects the most attractive place possible, engages the best speakers it can (not paying large fees, however) arranges for half fare on the railroads, gets reduced rates at the hotels, hires teams, opens halls of entertainment, provides fine orchestral concerts, and so on. That is to make the people come. Of course the teachers want to get all they can for their money, and the tradespeople of the place want to get all the money they can out of the teachers, so they are mutually striving to get what they can out of each other, but politely and good-naturedly, and striving to make a good impression so that every one will be satisfied.

Newport itself is beautiful in some parts, and decidedly disagreeable in others. In situation it is delightful, there is such a variety and attractiveness to its bay and island. But the city itself is old, quaint and plain. Narrow streets are lined by inconvenient sidewalks, in front of diminutive buildings. An air of antiquity pervades the place. Very little that is new is to be seen, and there is something positively lazy in the scenes. Especially is this true on the famous Bellevue avenue, where the wealth, snobbishness and flunkeyism of New York comes to pass the warm weather. All sorts of conveyances are seen on the avenue. Fine turnouts are frequently met, with crooked-legged drivers in their coachman's livery of glove-fitting pantaloons and Mother Hubbard-fitting gloves. It is always a mark of the genuine coachman, as he is seen in life-size on Bellevue avenue, that he has disagreeably ugly legs, and wears big, leather-colored gloves about four sizes too large for him. Then he always looks straight in front of him, and never sees anything. I suppose these images are human, but there is very little of common human nature about them. But the turnout is complete when behind a pair of these wooden figures on the driver's seat, behind a span of stub-tailed, silver-harnessed horses, is a woman, old, wrinkled, pompous and upright, with feet on the stool prepared for her, carrying herself as if she owned the whole island, and as if in her the whole population lived, moved and had their being, and she wished to impress them with the fact. Of all the disgusting sights to be seen in Bellevue avenue, there is none more conspicuous than this.

It is strange how the squalid and the pretentious come into close contact here. Most of the buildings on the avenue north of the Ocean House are mean and shabby, much like those which can be seen by the hundred on the side streets of Boston, or in the poorer quarter of any of our large cities. Usually they are of two low stories and have been planted quite near the street. Compared with what one would expect of so famous a watering place, they are but shanties. One could stand in the door of the famous Casino and throw a stone into a street where the houses are mean and poor, where there is no sidewalk worth the name, and where the whole atmosphere is in discouraging contrast to the supposed wealth on which Newport builds its fame as a summer resort.

Opposite the Casino is James Gordon Bennett's "cottage." It is a regular stone fort, closed and darkened, surrounded by a stone wall, and is dismal enough in its outward aspect. The grounds are large and well kept, but there are plenty of places all over Massachusetts which are more attractive, and where the time could be spent more profitably and enjoyably. Of course there are some beautiful estates, with large and well-kept grounds, but there is an air of exclusiveness about them, and the more one sees of Newport the stronger grows this feeling. At least my own previous impressions have been deepened by what I have seen this week, and Newport appears artificial, heartless and worthless as far as any good in the world is concerned. What do such people know of human life? What possible sympathy is there between them and the average American? I look upon these displays as the relics of a stage of barbaric aristocracy, handed down to us by English tradition, hostile to our spirit of American democracy, and destined to ultimate extinction from our land. Our national life has no place for such idlers and worthless excresences on the industrial and social community. The type will eventually die out, and there will be none left to mourn.

The school teachers have made the most of their trips to the various points of interest, and will doubtless vote that they have been handsomely entertained by the Newport people.

LANDON.

REGARDING THAT SURPLUS.

Mr. Editor:—You say in your last issue:

> During the fiscal year ending June 30 the government debt was reduced $112,000,000, while there was a surplus of $97,000,000 left over. Under these conditions it would seem as if the tariff might stand a slight reduction without injury to the country.

Now, why not let that 97 million stand against the 350 million of greenbacks which the government have promised to redeem with gold on demand? Any slight reduction of tariff will, according to experience and common sense, only increase the revenue by letting in more foreign goods to compete with our labor and capital.

The Republicans say the true tariff doctrine should be absolute free trade on all things not made nor produced in our own country, and protect all things that are or can be made here. How do the Democrats expect free trade or any reduction of tariff can be made to work with our present inflated condition of the currency? The 350 million of greenbacks and about the same amount of national bank bills, all based on nothing but promises, besides the great amount of 83-cent silver dollars, make prices high for houses, lands, horses, and everything we make and live upon. The Democrats were greatly opposed to specie payments—to make a paper dollar worth just as much as a gold dollar. Hence they wish to get every dollar out of the treasury to help inflate values so much the more. Inasmuch as our whole country cannot find a foreign market for only about seven one-hundredths of our farm produce, we should have the difference to pay in gold for the balance in trade against us.

How long would a hundred million last if our factories ceased to make the goods of every kind that we use? If we are to start on the road towards free trade as Carlisle and the leaders of the Democratic party say they will if the Mills bill passes, they should first begin by wedging in the inflated currency.

They tell us the tariff is a war measure. So is the inflated currency a war measure, and to get on to a sound basis for free trade, if that lays at the end of the road the Democrats wish to start us upon, by reducing a little at a time, like cutting off Pomp's tail an inch a day so as not to hurt him, the inflated currency should first be reduced.

Now either horn of this dilemma would produce great harm to the debtor portion of the country, and the mortgage holder would be all the gainer, if any gain there is to be, by taking every poor man's house, and his wages, too. The debt does not decrease with wages and commodities. Why not let the surplus remain, and even accumulate, until it equals the government's promises to pay?

The Republican doctrine is to let well enough alone, and as the country gains in population and wealth, this inflated condition of things would gradually disappear, and none would suddenly feel it. Then will come the time to talk free trade with some shadow of reason. Any stagnation in business, in manufacturing, increases the farm product instead of consuming it, while it is already too great for the market.

I have been a great sufferer from catarrh for over ten years; had it very bad, could hardly breathe. Some nights I could not sleep—had to walk the floor. I purchased Ely's Cream Balm and am using it freely, it is working a cure surely. I have advised several friends to use it, and with happy results in every case. It is the one medicine above all others made to cure catarrh, and it is worth its weight in gold. I thank God I have found a remedy I can use with safety and that does all that is claimed for it. CURE OF CANCER AND ULCERS.

Judge T. C. McLendon writes to the Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga., under the date of February 14, 1888: "About three years ago, Jerry Bradley, a colored man, had a cancerous sore on his face, near the right eye. It caused him a great deal of pain, and he lost the sight of the eye, but was finally cured of the cancer by the use of Swift's Specific. This case is well-known in Wilkes Co., Ga., where he lived (near Danbury), and of this case, I, myself, had personal knowledge."

Mr. L. Cox, of Arkabutla, Tate Co., Miss., writes February 24, 1888: "I suffered a great deal from ld ulcers for six years. Your medicine was recommended to me, and after using six bottles, I was completely cured. I never saw its equal as a blood purifier. My neighbors will use no other. Your medicine does even more than you claim for it. I have known it to cure cases which were thought to be hopeless. It is the best medicine made."

Mrs. A. M. Goldsmith, No. 674 Warren St., Brooklyn, N. Y., writes February 22, 1888: "I commenced using S. S. S., about three years ago. I had suffered with a sore throat for over a year, when I commenced using your remedy. I used a great many other remedies with no good results. My little girl also had sore fingers; it commenced from the quick, and then the nails would come off. We doctored her for over two years, and when I commenced using S. S. S., I thought I would see what it would do for me. I am thankful to say that it entirely cured her. It is the best remedy I know of for the blood. I really believe it was the means of saving my life. The doctor told me I had a throat disease similar to General Grant's. I cheerfully recommend it to all suffering from disordered blood. I use it now as a tonic whenever I think I need it."

Mr. B. F. George, Miford P. O., Ellis Co., Texas, writes: "I had a cancerous wart or mole on my eyelid, as large as the end of my thumb, which had the appearance of cancer, from which I suffered a long time. Seeing the S. S. S. advertised I commenced using it, and after the use of a few bottles the sore dropped out, my cancer was gone, and I was entirely relieved."

Mr. G. W. Pettis, of Aiken, S. C., writes: "I was a sufferer from cancer of the breast, and had been under the treatment of five physicians, but it did me no good. It was so bad that I had to stop work. After taking a course of S. S. S. I was entirely cured."

CAPT. CLEVELAND—I am the captain of the free trade crew.
CHORUS OF DEMOCRATIC TARS—And a right good captain, too.

CAPT. C.—You are very, very good, and be it understood,
I'm in for reform right through.

CHORUS—We are very, very good, and be it understood,
He's in for reform right through.

CAPT. C.—I can trim, back and steer with any boss here
And I know how to twist and squirm.
I was never known to scorn civil service reform,
And I'll never take a second term.

CHORUS—What! never?
CAPT. C.—No, never!
CHORUS—What! never?
CAPT. C.—Hardly ever!

CHORUS—Hardly ever take a second term!
Then here's one yell and a snicker, too,
For the one-term captain of the free trade crew,
Then here's one yell and a snicker, too,
For the one-term captain of the free trade crew.

CAPT. C.—I've done my best to satisfy you all.

CHORUS—And with you we are all content.

CAPT. C.—That's an everlasting whopper, but I think it only proper
To return the compliment.

CHORUS—That's an everlasting whopper, but he thinks it only proper
To return the compliment.

CAPT. C.—I have made a heap of noise, and I've called in the boys
To warm their frozen toes;
I've discouraged all proclivity to partisan activity,
And I've always worn free trade clothes.

CHORUS—What! always?
CAPT. C.—Yes, always!
CHORUS—What! always?
CAPT. C.—Well, recently!

CHORUS—He's recently donned free trade clothes?
Then here's a yell and a snicker, too,
For the free wool captain of the free trade crew.
Then here's a yell and a snicker, too,
For the captain of the free trade crew.

AMONG THE PARAGRAPHERS.

When pretty, pouting lips say "No."
Don't go
And blow
Your brains all out to simply show
How deep you're plunged in mental woe
And pain.
But hid in Cupid's ambush lie,
Nor cry,
Nor sigh,
Nor say all joy has passed you by,
And when a chance is offered try Again. —Merchant Traveler.

Good news.—Smith—"I see by the paper that the Dey of Algiers is dead." Jones—"I'm glad to hear it. It's time death took a Dey off."—Texas Siftings.

"And are you the captain's boy?" asked the old lady on deck. "Yes'um," he said bravely. "Well, you don't look like him at all," she said, "and I never would have believed it.—Ocean.

Boy—"Want a boy, sir?" Hobson—"What for?" Boy—"Why, to pay two dollars to Saturday night." Hobson—"For doing what?" Boy—"Why, for waiting all the week."—Stray.

Doctor (who finds a tramp groaning by the roadside)—"What is the matter with you?" Tramp, dolefully—"My system is all run down." Doctor—"By what?" Tramp—"By a dog."—Stray.

Waiter (to gentleman who has just tipped him—"Excuse me, sir, but do you know that this is a twenty-cent piece?" Gentleman, puting it back in his pocket.—"Why, no, I took it for a quarter. But it's all right, I know where I got it."—New York Epoch.

"What did your daughter graduate in?" asked a friend of another. "White silk, with a satin corsage and elbow sleeves," was the prompt answer. "I mean what branches," said the surprised guest. "Oh, er—er—why, the usual branches, I suppose," answered the perplexed mother.—Detroit Free Press.

Mother (to daughter)—"I was surprised and shocked, Clara, that you should show so little emotion at the funeral of your Uncle James, and he leaves you in his will $10,000, too." Daughter—"Yes, mamma, but when the funeral took place I had no idea that dear Uncle James had remembered me so generously.—Life.

First business man, busy with a pile of letters—"Yes, I'm most dead, and my correspondence not half done yet. I wish I could afford to adopt your plan. You dictate to that pretty girl typewriter yet, I suppose?" Second business man—"Dictate to her yet?" Not much, I don't. We're married now.—Troy Times.

A BORE.—"What is a bore, papa?" "A bore, child. Eh—ahem—a bore is a fellow who keeps talking to you about himself when you want to talk to him about yourself." That's funny." "What's funny?" "Why I heard Mr. Smith say to Mr. Jones that you were a bore, and you told mamma just now that he is one."—Town Topics.

Returned farmer.—"No more Southern Kansas for me. I've had enough of it." Eastern man—"Grasshoppers?" R. F.—"No: heat." E. M.—"I suppose it is rather warm down there." R. F.—"Warm! You see I thought I'd strike it rich by raising pop corn for the Northern market, and I planted the whole farm with it." E. M.—"Good idea. Didn't it grow?" R. F.—"Grow? Every blessed kernel popped in the ground."—Stray.

The Buffalo Express records the smart repartee of a country lad: "One day last week I was out riding with a fellow who seemed to think it his mission to say or do something smart every minute. Presently we overtook a barefoot urching driving a cow home from pasture, and my companion reined up the horse and spoke to him, saying, 'Say, my little man, what time will it be at 6 o'clock this afternoon?' Without a moment's hesitation the lad answered: ''Twill be bedtime for hens and fools. You're not a hen, but 'twill be your bedtime all the same.'"

Business Man—"What's the matter? You look blue." Partner—"I expected to have some money left over this year to invest in real estate, but it's the same old story. I'll close this year without a cent." "What does that extravagant little wife of yours want this time?" "I don't know whether it's a new palace, a barrel of diamonds or a castle in Europe, but it's something mighty expensive. She hasn't said yet." "Eh? Then how do you know she wants anything?" "When I went home last night she was darning my stockings."—Omaha World.

HIS WIFE HIS BARKEEPER.

"Say, old chappie, have a drink?" said a rather well dressed young man to a friend whom he met in Park Row the other day.

"No, thanks, Harry, I've quit taking a drink in a barroom since I struck my new position in the Controller's office; we have to do considerable figuring. I have turned over a new leaf, in fact."

"You have turned over a new leaf and you are doing some financing and still you're not taking a drink, eh? Well, explain yourself."

"Well, we'll figure on the whisky question first. A saloon keeper pays on an average about $2 per gallon for whisky. One gallon contains an average of sixty-five drinks, and at 10 cents a drink I pay just $6.50 per gallon for my whisky. In other words, I pay $2 for the whiskey and $4.50 to a man for handing it over the bar. Now where my financing comes in is just here: I have made my wife my barkeeper. I lent her $2 to buy a gallon of whisky for a beginning, and every time I feel like taking a drink I go to her and pay 10 cents for it, and I figure thus by the time I have consumed a gallon she will have $6 50, or enough money to refund the $2 she borrowed, to pay for another gallon of liquor and have a ballance of $2.50. Mary, that's my wife, says she will be able to conduct future operations on her own capital, and when I have become an inebriate, unable to support myself, shunned and despised by all respectable persons, so Mary says, you know, my wife will have enough money to keep me till I get ready to fill a drunkard's grave. What do you think of Mary's arithemetic, old chappie, not so slow, eh? Oh, no? no bar-room budge for me."

DAINTINESS THE LATEST FAD.

There has seldom been a season which floated so many dainty toilet whimsicalties. Buttons have been in eclipse, but they come out radiant. If you are a girl of the period you fasten your bodice with flowers, enamelled flowers, of course, or wrought silver flowers, or some other national jewelry fancy. If you are a girl of the period too, you are known by your flowers, and you always wear the same sorts though in different devices for different gowns. Pansy buttons are favorites and are very pretty with their rich dark colors over the fabric of walking dresses or tea gowns. Young girls wear daisy buttons or buttercups, these last being done in one instance that a Broadway jeweller tells of in pure gold. Sweet pea buttons are delicately colored in pale pink and blue, and are exact copies of the natural flower, nodding from the buttonholes up and down the gown. With a pretty summer dress of white challi there was worn a day or two since buttons of tiny green leaves wrought in green gold. These flower buttons are very fashionable for the new summer resort toilets, but they never can be very common, for in the best sort they are made to order and are by no means inconsiderable additions to the cost of a gown. Enamelled flowers when not used for buttons are turned into pins and then used in a dozen places, scattered over the front of the bodice, or, much more effectively, to catch up the draperies, the ribbons and laces on skirt and bodice in bewilderingly coquettish ways.

INDIVIDUAL STATIONERY.

Individual stationery is a notion that spreads like witch grass in the ground. Each woman must have something that is characteristic of herself, something original, something by which her private letter paper may anywhere be known. A favorite fancy is a black and white sketch in broad outline, done with light strokes, and not too large or conspicuous, just an odd bit of something to catch the reader's eye stowed away in one corner. A women who can handle a pencil has the advantage here. She will have a thorny rose, or a heap of sea shells, or a couple of tennis rackets hurling cupids towards each other, or a yacht in a stiff breeze, or a blue stocking bending over a writing desk, or any one of fifty oddities else heading her letter paper. Girls in want of pin money are earning large sums doing these things for richer friends. They are never pretty, nor even tolerable, unless they are done with a half dozen free strokes, and then they are sometimes very pretty indeed.

ITS OWN MORAL.—Chauncy M. Depew said something the other day that is good enough to frame. He said:

"Looking back upon a life of nearly fifty years, I remember those who started with me. All those who were sober and industrious and saved their money, now own their own households, but every one of those who drank are dead."

A GREEDY PRAYER.—The two small kids were saying their prayers. It was Christmas time coming, and one of them began praying the Lord to send him a wooly horse, and a gun, and everything he could possibly think of. The other one began to cry.

"Please, mamma, stop Johnny. He's praying for everything for himself, and he won't leave anything for God to send me."—San Francisco Chronicle.

The following from an English paper shows good appreciation of kind wishes and hopes:

The superintendent of a London Sunday-school addressing his school on New Year's Sunday said: "Now boys, I wish you all a happy New Year, and hope you will be better boys this year than you were last."

Same to you, sir," from different parts of the school.

That Tired Feeling

Is experienced by almost every one in warm weather, and many people resort to Hood's Sarsaparilla to drive away the languor and exhaustion. The blood, laden with impurities which have been accumulating for months, moves sluggishly through the veins, the mind fails to think quickly, and the body is still slower to respond. Hood's Sarsaparilla is just what is needed. It purifies, vitalizes, and enriches the blood, makes the head clear, creates an appetite, overcomes that tired feeling, tones the nervous system, and imparts new strength and vigor to the whole body.

"I was all run down and unfit for business. I was induced to take a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and it built me right up so that I was soon able to resume work. I recommend it to all who are afflicted." D. W. BRATE, stone-cutter, No. 4 Martin St., Albany, N. Y.

GINGER!

There is something at once touching and beautiful in the contemplation of the universal confidence reposed in SANFORD'S GINGER. And justly so.

With what alacrity it responds to the cry of distress. No cramp or pain or cold or chill has ever made a demand upon it for relief or cure that has not met with instant and grateful response.

It is sure to check any disturbance of the bowels, instantly relieves cramps and pains, prevents indigestion, destroys disease germs in water drunk, restores the circulation when suspended by a chill, a frequent cause of cholera morbus, breaks up colds and fevers, and wards off malarial, contagious and epidemic influences.

Never travel without SANFORD'S GINGER.

Guilty, or Not Guilty?

She stood at the bar of justice,—
A creature wan and wild,—
In form too small for a woman,
In feature too old for a child;
For a look so worn and pathetic
Was stamped on her pale, young face,
It seemed long years of suffering
Must have left that silent trace.

"Your name," said the judge, as he eyed her
With kindly look, yet keen,
"Is?"—"Mary McGuire, if you please, sir."
"And your age?"—"I am turned fifteen."
"Well, Mary,"—and then from a paper
He slowly and gravely read—
"You are charged here—I am sorry to say it—
With stealing three loaves of bread.

"You look not like an offender,
And I hope that you can show
The charge to be false. Now tell me,
Are you guilty of this, or no?"
A passionate burst of weeping
Was at first her sole reply;
But she dried her tears in a moment
And looked in the judge's eye.

"I will tell you just how it was, sir:
My father and mother are dead,
And my little brothers and sisters
Were hungry and asked me for bread.
At first I earned it for them
By working hard all day;
But somehow the times were bad, sir,
And the work all fell away.

"I could get no more employment;
The weather was bitter cold;
The young ones cried and shivered—
Little Johnny's but four years old.
So what was I to do, sir?
I am guilty,—but do not condemn;
I took—oh! was it stealing?—
The bread to give to them."

Every man in the court room—
Gray beard and thoughtless youth—
Knew, as he looked upon her,
That the prisoner spoke the truth.
Out from their pockets came kerchiefs,
Out from their eyes sprung tears,
And out from their old faded wallets
Treasures hoarded for years.

The judge's face was a study—
The strangest you ever saw—
As he cleared his throat and murmured
Something about the law.
For one so learned in such matter—
So wise in dealing with men—
He seemed, on a simple question,
Sorely puzzled just then.

But no one blamed him or wondered
When at last these words were heard:
"The sentence of this young prisoner
Is for the present deferred."
And no one blamed him or wondered
When he went to her and smiled,
And tenderly led from the court room
Himself the "guilty" child.

THE CHANGED HOME.

I.

"I wonder why it is," said Charlie Banks to his beautiful young wife, as they sat happily together at their tea table, so tastefully laid, one winter evening, "that Willis Clark spends his evenings so constantly at the club rooms. Jennie must feel dreadfully about it! And how happy he did seem with her only a few months ago! Why, it isn't more than two years since they were married, is it?"

"It is just two years this month," said Mrs. Banks, "and I do not know as I ever knew a happier couple. I think they love each other yet, and I have been wondering for some time whether or not I ought to tell her what the trouble is, and help her to win her husband back again. When she was here the other day she told me that Mr. Clark had spent but few evenings at home for six weeks, and she might as well make up her mind to have the best time she could without him, for he evidently did not intend to do anything to make her happy."

Friends dropping in changed the conversation, and it was not thought of again until Mrs. Clark ran in the next morning to make a neighborly call and ask some questions about the making of currant jelly. She had scarcely seated herself when she said to Mrs. Banks, who looked so neat and pretty in her clean chintz dress:

"How can you keep so neat in the morning, when you are making cake and doing all the same little things all over the house that I do? You make me really ashamed of myself in this dark woolen wrapper, all covered with spots and stains. But it's so dark I always say you can't find the spots unless you look for them, and I couldn't keep clean ten minutes with such a light dress as yours."

"I think you could easily if you were once accustomed to them," said Mrs. Banks. "I have to make them plain so they will do up easily, and short enough so that I can run about quickly, as I tidy the house or make cake or desserts in the kitchen."

"And your hair, too, looks as nice as though you had just arranged it for tea. I don't see how you can spend the time in the morning to put it up so nicely. I just whisk mine up any way, and I know I look like a witch, but I can't help it, and some days it's more than I do to get dressed and fixed up for supper. But it's true, as Willis says, you always look nice. The other night when he came in he said to me, 'You are the dowdiest looking woman I've seen to-day, Jennie,' and it was all I could do to keep from crying. But I was so provoked I said something very ugly to him, and told him if he treated his wife as handsomely as Mr. Banks treated you, perhaps she'd have some ambition to get fixed up. It don't seem much like the dear old bridal times when he used to come home at night with a cheery greeting and loving words, and thought I was the sweetest and best little wife in all the world. But Mrs. Bains, across the way, who was one of my young lady friends, you know, and who was married about the time I was, says her husband is just so changed; that he goes to his club rooms more than half the time, and seems to have lost all his love for her, and now if he will only give her all the money she wants, she'll find ways to make herself happy and have a very good time without him."

"I do pity her," said Mrs. Banks, "from the bottom of my heart. Life would be a blank to me if my husband had lost his love, or, indeed, if he did not love me more and more every month of our lives."

"That is what I used to think," said Mrs. Clark, but it seems now as though I should soon be as indifferent as Mrs. Bains, for I don't see any help for it."

"I do," said Mrs. Banks, "and if you will not be offended I will tell you how I believe you can remedy it easily, for I will tell you only what I have learned from my own experience."

"Indeed, I will not be offended," said Mrs. Clark, "and will gladly do anything possible to bring back those happy times."

"Now," said Mrs. Banks, "to-morrow morning you dress yourself in one of those pretty chintz wrappers you wore at the seashore last summer; arrange your hair as neatly as for evening; put on a little dainty ribbon on your neck, and a clean linen collar, and then after breakfast ask Mr. Clark if he can come home a little earlier than usual (talking as though he had been coming every night); that you are going to have something extra nice for supper, and I am pretty sure he will come; then at tea time have the table set as if you expected company. I do not mean to have your best china out, but have your silver and glass bright and clean, the cloth clean, and everything put on in nice order, not forgetting a fresh bouquet from the garden for the center of the table; then dress yourself as carefully as you used to when Mr. Clark was a lover, have your sitting room looking pretty and tidy, and welcome your husband with smiles and a joyful greeting, and I know you will soon see a wonderful change in him. Now, to do all this only requires an extra half hour of time, but it will bring you a good many half-hours of joy. You have got into the habit, which too many married ladies have, of thinking that of course your husband loved and admired you more than any one else; that he always would, and you could sit all day in your wrapper, and that not over-nice, sewing and reading, and meet him in the evening looking just as he left you in the morning. But you and they are sadly mistaken. I have found that wives and husbands, too, need to make themselves attractive continually if they wish to retain the freshness of their love and a growing admiration for each other. And wives are much more apt to lose their personal ambition in this regard than are their husbands. And if their love and admiration begin to lessen, their respect for each other dies also, and they are soon living along in a kind of business partnership, but without a particle of enthusiasm or real congeniality. And I have no doubt that a little carelessness on this and other matters has been the first cause of troubles which have grown to be unmixed calamities."

They conversed a little while longer on the same subject, and then Mrs. Clark procured the desired recipes, and, thanking Mrs. Banks for the plain, kind talk, started for home, telling her she would follow her suggestions and soon let her hear the result of them.

II.

Love's a fire that needs renewal
Of fresh beauty for its fuel.

Mrs. Clark went home with her new plans and ideas, and with a courageous heart, determined to follow Mrs. Banks' suggestions and do all in her pover to make herself and her home more attractive to her husband, and to strive to win back his love, if it really was waning. With all these pleasant thoughts in her mind she made her currant jelly, and then, after dinner, set to work earnestly to put her home in better condition, hoping that her husband might come in that night. In the first place she opened and aired her close and closed parlor, gave it a thorough dusting, which it had been needing for a long time, but which she had hoped the closely-fitting blinds would not disclose to any one, and then went down to the garden with a newspaper and scissors in hand, and cut off geraniums, heliotropes, pansies, verbenas, and other pretty flowers, and soon had several tasteful bouquets in parlor and sitting room, and a pretty one all ready for the tea-table. Then her sitting-room, which had been neglected for days, because she had "so lovely a story she wanted to get through, and could do nothing until she finished it," was put in neat order and freshened every way, and after baby was dressed and the cook came up stairs to sit with him a while (for these young married people kept but one servant) and Mrs. Clark had given her some special directions about tea, she went up to see what improvement she could make in Mrs. Clark herself. She went to a large packing-box and took out from a number of fresh, pretty dresses one that she had worn the previous summer at the seashore, which she had kept laid away to wear on extra occasions, and as she looked at it she said to herself, "How surprised Willis will be, if he comes in, to see me dressed in this way. And yet I know he will be glad to see me looking nice again, and during the week as well as on Sunday." The dress was a soft gray, too light a color to be worn on the street, and while Mrs. Clark made a good appearance on the Sabbath in her black grenadine, she had put aside the light, pretty house dresses, and had felt for a long time that she need take no pains during the week. While she was fumbling over the box, she picked up an old letter of her husband's, written to her years before, and as she glanced at the date and looked at its contents, she saw it was written on his birthday, and this day, the 16th of July, was the anniversary. She had entirely forgotten it. "Surely I might don this dress on his birthday," she said, "and try to look my very prettiest." So arranging her hair in a tasteful way, and adorning her neck with pretty blue ribbons, she went down into the parlor, opened the piano, which she had not touched for weeks, and began to sing some of the old songs which a few years ago Willis had enjoyed so much.

The baby was taking a nap, the cook getting supper, and after taking a look at the table to see that all was right, she stepped out to the front porch for a moment, and as she stood there Mr. Banks passed, bowed and said:

"Your husband will be along in a few minutes; he came up on the train with me, and I left him around the corner."

[Mr. Clark was coming home to-night because he expected to meet a business friend near by after tea.]

Mrs. Clark seated herself again at the piano, and as her husband came up the steps he heard the music, and thinking some friend had come to make them a visit, opened the poor as softly as possible, and was just skipping up stairs to polish a little when he caught a glimpse of his wife, and came quickly into the parlor, saying:

"Well, well, Jennie, what's all this about? I haven't seen you look so pretty for a long time. Who are you expecting?"

"No one but you," said Mrs. Clark.

"What has come over you, and how have you happened to open the parlor and fix up all these bouquets, and make yourself up so fine, and sit there at the piano and sing away like a regular prima donna? It is so long since I have heard you sing that I did not recognize your voice at all, and wondered who could be here."

"This is your birthday," said Mrs. Clark, "and I thought we would just celebrate a little, and, though I did not surely know you would be able to be here to tea, I kind of felt in my bones that you would, and sure enough you are here."

"I am mighty glad I came," said her husband, and then with an admiring glance and a hearty kiss, he said: "I shall have to fix up in my Sunday-go-to-meeting suit, I guess, to do the honors of the occasion, and added: "Let's have one of our good old-fashioned sings after tea."

How happy Mrs. Clark looked as her husband went up stairs, and how richly rewarded she was already for the trouble she had taken. And, after a delightful supper, and a frolic with the baby, and an hour's singing of the old familiar songs, Mr. Clark said:

"Well, what a nice birthday surprise you have given me! It seems like the old happy time. I shouldn't be sorry to have birthdays come every week instead of once a year!"

"I'll try to give you one every week," said his wife, "and we'll have a kind of a rival club up here."

Mrs. Clark related to her friend, Mrs. Banks, the next day, the successful birthday celebration, and thanked her with tears in her eyes for the happy suggestions, and said:

"I do believe I can win him back again. "Oh, you don't know how happy he did seem last night!"

"I'm sure you will," said Mrs. Banks, "and you will learn, as I have learned, that there is more satisfaction and joy in doing things to please your husband, and in making yourself constantly attractive to him, than in the applause and flattery of the world beside, when you hear no longer his loving words, or enjoy his appreciative smile."

This was the beginning of happier days, and, although Mrs. Clark's tea table was not always adorned with flowers, nor her meat dishes decorated with parsley, nor her parlors filled with the sweet fragrance of geraniums and roses, yet her husband found an attractive home, a neatly dressed and cheerful wife, who talked of something more interesting than the servants and gossip about the neignbors; and ere the winter had passed he was counted out at the old club-rooms, and used to tell some of his old chums, when they wondered what had become of him, that he had fallen in love with a select club at the Clark House and couldn't spend much more time with them. His winter evenings were now spent delightfully at home, reading aloud to his wife while she sewed, or singing, or making visits with her to pleasant friends, or occasionally attending concerts or agreeable entertainments. The indifference and coolness between them had all melted away, and home had become a delightful place, to which the heart of the husband turned with ever-increasing joy.

A short time before, how dark the future looked to Mrs. Clark, for lack of the love and appreciation and companionship of her husband; and how easily she herself had been able to win him back again. Many wives are sadly mistaken who think they can, if only literary, sit with unkempt hair, in slovenly attire and a disordered house, and still retain the freshness of love and constant esteem of their husbands. A bright and interesting woman, in neat attire, and the queen of a quiet, well-ordered home, though she have but an hour a day for mental improvement, is far more winning and far happier than she who spends the day with her books, oblivious of her surroundings, and who can talk in scholiastic style.

The story is told that as Artemus Ward was once traveling in the cars, feeling miserable and dreading to be bored, a man sat down by him and said: "Did you hear the latest thing on Horace Greeley?" "Greeley? Greeley?" said Artemus, "Horace Greeley? Who is he?" The man was quiet about five minutes. Pretty quick he said: "George Francis Train is kicking up a good deal of a row over in England; do you think they will put him in a bastile?" "Train? Train? George Francis Train?" said Artemus solemnly, "I never heard of him." This ignorance kept the man quiet for fifteen minutes. Then he said: "What do you think of General Grant's chances for president? Do you think they will run him?" "Grant? Grant? Hang it, man," said Artemus, "you appear to know more strangers than any man I ever saw." The man was furious. He walked up the car, but at last came back and said: "You confounded ignoramus, did you ever hear of Adam?" Artemus looked up and said: "What was his other name?"

It is no vanity for a man to pride himself on what he has honestly got and prudently uses.

THE ORIGINAL ARKANSAW TRAVELER.

The scene is that of a dilapidated log cabin in Arkansas. Its dramatis personae, a trapper seated upon an inverted tub, playing the first part of a familiar air upon an old violin, and his wife and children. A stranger enters, and the following colloquy ensues:

Stranger—How do you do, sir? Are you well?

Trapper—Stranger, kin you call a man who eats three squar meals a day, drinks hearty, an' sleeps sound—"well?" (Fiddles.)

Stranger—I think I could. How long have you been living here?

Trapper—D'ye see that mountain thar?

Stranger—Well?

Trapper—That wor h'yar when I come h'yar. (Fiddles.)

Stranger—Thank you for the information.

Trapper—You're welcome, Stranger.

Stranger—Can I stay here to-night?

Trapper—No, you can't stay h'yar.

Stranger—How long will it take to get to the next tavern?

Trapper—Well, you'll not get there at all if you stand thar a-foolin' with me all night. (Fiddles.)

Stranger—How far do you call it to the next tavern?

Trapper—I reckon it's upwards o' some distance.

Stranger—Do you keep any spirits in this house?

Trapper—Guess thar's plenty down to the grave yard. (Fiddles.)

Stranger—How do you cross the river ahead?

Trapper—The ducks all swim across. (Fiddles.)

Strange—How far is it to the forks of the road?

Trapper—The road isn't forked yet in these diggin's. (Fiddles.)

Stranger—Where does this road go to?

Trapper—Well, it ain't moved a step since I've been h'yar.

Stranger—Why don't you repair the roof of your house? It must leak.

Trapper—'Cause it's been rainin' like all creation for three weeks. (Fiddles.)

Why don't you repair when it's not raining?

Trapper—'Cause then it don't leak. (Fiddles.)

Stranger—Why don't you play the second part of that tune?

Trapper—'Cause I don't know it. Kin you?

Stranger—I can.

Trapper—You kin! Look h'yar, Stranger, any man who kin play the second part of that tune kin go right into congress on it.

Stranger—Give me the fiddle. (Takes fiddle and plays entire tune.

Trapper (yelling with joy)—That's it! By gol! Do it again, Stranger. Yah-ep! (Shaking hands). H'yar, Stranger, make yourself at home. You kin stay a week—live and die h'yar if it's agreeable. H'yar, Sal, bring that there jug out. An' go dig some sassafras root and make the Stranger a cup of tea. Shake hands again, Stranger. By gol! you're a trump, you are! Play it agin.

A PARABLE CONCERNING A SNAKE.

A farmer once found a rattlesnake in his field. Having caught it and gagged it and put it in a bag, he carried it home, and called his neighbors together, saying, "Behold, I have captured a snake, and it is big and strong; now, therefore, what shall I do with it?" Then one man rose up and said, "This is a very harmless-looking reptile. I think he might be allowed to go wherever he pleases." Another said, "My friends, do you not know that this harmless-looking serpent has a sting? Now, therefore, I move that all people, and especially all young people, be warned faithfully to keep out of the way of the serpent, lest they be bitten." This council seemed to impress the assembly very favorably.

Then a third speaker began in this wise: "Since the bite of this reptile is so very dangerous, I would submit that it might be well to make certain rules and regulations; as, for instance, that he is not to go abroad on the day that is called Sunday; and that he must not be allowed to sting anybody who is not of age; moreover, that he shall not be let out of his cage at all until a council of citizens shall so decide. And finally," said this wise and thoughtful man, "I suggest that an oath be administered to our neighbor, the keeper of the snake, that he will faithfully fulfill all these provisions."

Now it came to pass that the neighbors were so moved with these words that with one voice they cried out: "Let it be done, even as thou hast said!" And they were about to adjourn.

When, behold, there came an old man into the council, and, hearing what had been done, he exclaimed: "The snake! Give him to me, and I will crush his head!"

At this there was a great commotion. Some cried one thing and some another; but all agreed that such proceedings would be contrary to their rights and liberties; for they loved the snake. And, lo, he liveth to this day! He that is wise, let him interpret the parable.—The Sower.

How nice it will be when we are able to sail through the blue, and call upon people in the other planets. "Where did you go for your honeymoon?" "We went as far as Neptune. We stopped a couple of days in Venus, but the hotels were so bad we pushed on." "How was the weather?" "We passed a thunderstorm this morning about a million miles up, coming this way. Tney told us it would be here this evening." "How was the traveling?" "The balloon cars are very well, but the conductors are very rude. Yes, I like the climate of Mars, but wasn't it hot passing Jupiter! Saturn's rings were rather pretty, but on the whole I was disappointed in them."—San Francisco Chronicle.

GOING A-VISITING.

I went down to the depot two hours before train time because I had several errands to do there. Looking up the broad street which ran through the village, I saw an old horse, hitched to a light wagon in which was a man and woman. The woman waved her hand and the man plied the whip, and in a couple of minutes the rig turned in and stopped at the platform with such suddenness that the mud flew in all directions.

"Has she gone?" shouted the woman, as she climbed out.

"Who?"

"The train."

"No, ma'am."

"Well, that's a piece of good luck. I thought we'd be about five minutes too late. For mercy's sake get that trunk checked and buy my ticket."

"Yes, Mary, yes," he replied, as he put forth his best effort and dragged the chest down the platform and asked for a ticket and check.

"It is an hour and fifty minutes yet," replied the agent.

"W—what! Hear that, Mary! You've been stewing and fretting since 3 o'clock this morning, and here we are two hours ahead of time."

"It can't be."

"That's what he says "

"Well, William, don't you believe all he says. You remember how Aunt Harper got left by taking the word of an agent. Sometimes trains are ahead of time, and sometimes behind. Kiss me good-bye, William."

"But there's lots of time, Mary."

She appeared to me to settle the question, and when I put the time at an hour and forty-five minutes she consented to go into the waiting-room. She sat down on the edge of a seat and nervously began an inventory.

"Here's my handkerchief, and here's my wallet with ninety cents in it, and here's my snuff-box and thimble and steel-bowed glasses. Here's the recipe for making hard soap I'm taking to Cousin Jane, and here that box of mutton tallow to go to 'Squire Johnson. William, I'm all right—haven't forgotten a thing?"

"Do tell!"

"And I only had five weeks to get ready in. Well, William, good-bye."

"Oh, pshaw! Mary; lots of time yet."

"Don't be too sure about it. You can't always tell about these railroads. I don't want to get left."

She sat down again, took a second inventory, and then musingly said:

"I covered up the flour barrel and hung up that bag of dried pumpkin, and put the jar of soft soap away, and lowered the curtains in the parlor, and shut up the cook stove."

"Yes, Mary," replied the husband.

"And I poured the water out of the tea kettle, carried that piece of butter down stairs, sent home Mrs. Aiken's drawin' of tea and cup of brown sugar, and put that piece of pork back into the brine."

"Yes, I'll swear to it."

"Well, William, good-bye, I'll be home in three weeks.

"It isn't time yet, Mary. It's over an hour yet before the train'll come along."

"Well, don't make any mistake. You know that Cousin Hannah dreamed that I got left, and I don't want it to come true. And now let's see: You are to board at Henry's and go over to the house once a day."

"Yes."

"Be careful to shut all the doors after you."

"I will."

"And don't build no fires."

"No."

"Well, good-bye, William. It must be time to go."

"Oh, no, Mary. It just an hour by the clock. Don't be so nervous."

"I am a little nervous, I suppose, but I reckon it's because I've forgotten something. Did you take the starch back to Mrs. Davis?"

"I did."

"And carry the Widder Smith's kettle home?"

"Yes."

"And did I scald the coffee pot out and hang it up behind the stove?"

"Yes, I saw you."

"And wipe out the stove biler and hang it up in the celler way?"

"Yes."

"Well, that's all, I guess, and I'll kiss you good-bye. I'll write you a letter next Sunday."

"Now, Mary, don't be so oneasy. It's a bad sign."

"Yes, I seem to be oneasy, but I hope it don't mean airthquakes or hurricanes. Now, William, your liver medicine is on the shelf in the kitchen."

"Yes."

"You take your liver medicine three times a day—half a teaspoonful—in water. I left out an old spoon."

"Yes."

"If you have a pain in your chest make a mustard plaster. There's mustard in that tin box on the second buttery shelf, left hand corner, and you can tear up one of my old aprons."

"Yes."

"Let's see! You may have another bile while I am gone. That flaxseed is in that yaller box on the top buttery shelf."

"Yes."

"And—why, for mercy's sake!"

"What is it?"

"There ain't no ink in the house for you to write with. I knew I'd forgotten something."

"That's so."

"Well, it's too late now. Put a little vinegar and lampblack in the old bottle, and I guess you can make out. Well, good-bye, William. Remember, I have chalked down the number of hens on the woodshed door, and you won't forget that we have thirteen hogs, forty-six sheep, one horse and a yoke of oxen. Let the clock run down and don't try to wind it, and if you want the lantern you'll find it on a hook in the woodshed with candle and matches all ready. Good-bye, William!"

HURTFUL SPEECH IN SICK ROOMS.

The horribly brutal speeches to invalids that are made by visitors apparently friendly and apparently sane, are inexcusable. Some of them are so horrible that one must laugh at the very remembrance of them.

To a dear old gentleman who had been confined to the house for some time, came the cheering inquiry: "Does the grave look pleasant to you, Mr. ——?"

A lady, sorely and dangerously afflicted with dropsy, unable to breathe except in a sitting position, worn out by sleeplessness and suffering, was thus comforted by a sympathetic neighbor after viewing her with eager curiosity: "Well, Mrs. ——, you do look awfully! I do hope you will die before you bust."

To a nervous old man depressed by a long struggle with diseases, and feeble, yet very anxious to recover, came this cheering observation: "Dear me, how you have failed lately! Why, you're as white as a sheet! your blood is all turning to water! you can't last long!"

By the bedside of a sensitive woman attacked with pneumonia, I heard a most benevolent and truly Christian woman say in clear tones, "There is no hope. I see the death mark on her face."

You will find, if ill for several weeks, that some of your best friends will study your appearance and report with startling frankness: "Why, my dear, how you have changed! I really don't believe I should have known you. You are paler, or more unnaturally flushed, as the case may be, since I was here last; and, yes, you have perceptibly lost flesh. But you must get well; we love you too much; we can't get along without you." This is said with the kindest meaning, but to the "puir sick body" it means faintness or increased fever or a cry after the visitor has departed.

Whatever may be your disease, the conversation, instead of turning upon the cheerful and engrossing topics of the time, is too apt to be fastened to your own condition, and instances are given of Mr. So-and-so, who died of the same disease, or Miss This-or-that, who at last recovered, but has never been her own self since. We all know how the imagination acts upon the body, even producing death in a perfectly healthy person. Then how careful we should be in a sick room.—Chicago Journal.

THE LOMB PRIZE ESSAYS.

No. 1. Healthy Homes and Foods for the Working Classes. By Victor C. Vaughan, M. D., Ph. D.

No. 2. The Sanitary Conditions and Necessities of School-houses and School Life. By D. F. Lincoln, M. D.

No. 3. Disinfection and Individual Prophylaxis against Infectious Diseases. By Geo. M. Sternberg, M. D., U. S. Army.

No. 4. The Preventable Causes of Diseases, Injury and Death in American Manufactories and Workshops, and the Best Means and Appliances for Preventing and Avoiding Them. By George H. Ireland.

The most successful philanthropy, that which really extends its usefulness most widely and most efficiently, is of the sort which, in a practical and direct manner, enables large numbers, whole classes of people, to help themselves in a way which they could not do or did not know how to do before.

The giving of money to the poor to relieve their immediate sufferings is often a commendable charity and sometimes of urgent necessity, but it is of trivial importance when compared with that broad-minded, far-reaching charitable effort which aims to improve the social, moral, and physical condition of whole communities, not so much by directly doing for them what they need, as by enabling them to do it for themselves.

Such is the aim and purpose of Mr. Henry Lomb, the originator of these prize essays. There are four of them. As their titles indicate, they are devoted to the consideration of subjects most deeply and intimately connected with the daily life of the American citizen, and more especially of the wage-earner.

These essays are not speculative disquisitions on theoretical questions concerning modes of life, but plain, intelligible lessons of the most practical character, relating to the homes we live in, the food we eat, the care of our children in their school life, the means of protection from disease, and the avoidance of the special dangers of our workshops and factories. They are all matters of every-day concern,—matters in which all classes and all communities are directly or indirectly deeply interested.

The subjects are treated by the respective authors in a manner so clear and lucid that they present themselves to the mind of the intelligent reader almost as self-evident truths. They are, indeed, a summing up and presentation, in the most practical form, of the best teachings of sanitary science on the topics discussed. These four essays are an application, so far as they go, of the laws of hygiene to the practical needs of the American workingman and the workingman's family.

The value, however, is not limited to the workingman. It is coming to be definitely understood that the prosperity of every country, and of all its inhabitants, is largely dependent on labour and the well-being of the laborer; and so it comes to pass that those who do not work with their hands will find it no less their interest to profit by the teachings of these prize essays, and to aid as best they can the promulgation of the truths they teach. Not only that, but having diffused these four gospels of good health among the people, it will be again no less their duty and interest to help provide the means by which the people may live up to the principles of their teaching and enjoy the profit of their application.

The prices of these essays are as follows: No. 1, 10 cents; Nos. 2, 3, and 4, 5 cents each. In book form, well bound in cloth, 50 cents. To be had at the book-stores, or by addressing Dr. Irving A. Watson, Secretary American Public Health Association, Concord, N. H.

Dr. Sternberg's Essay has been published in German, French, and Flemish, and Dr. Vaughan's in German.

WHITE SUMMER GOWNS.

The linen laces remain popular for trimming underwear because of their durability and genuine quality. Fine Hamburgs on India lawn and French nainsook may be bought in patterns which match in various widths, and are exceedingly convenient for trimming muslin gowns for commencement days or for summer afternoon wear. A dress of sheer white muslin has been too often extolled by poets and novelists to receive new praises. It still remains the loveliest dress of a lovely woman, far more beautiful than regal velvet or stately brocade. It is a mistake for our girl graduates ever to adopt white silk surah or sheer white woolens in place of the old time muslin. The plain, Directoire styles, full, plain skirts, slightly draped at the back or left to hang in full, plain breadths, and short, round waists, shirred full in front, with a tendency to full sleeves, are the features of the white afternoon gown this season. Girdles of ribbon coming from the under arm seams of the waist in cream white, pale blue, primrose yellow, or some flower-like tint of color, are frequently a feature of these gowns. A great many dresses have been made up this season with pyramids of pleating in front, panels of embroidery at the sides, and full, straight breadths at the back, thus excluding all drapery. Ribbons of gros-grain in No. 12 and No. 16 width, with a plain satin edge, are preferred for garniture to white dresses over any ribbon with feather edge or a ribbon of moire, except in the narrow widths in which moire is used. Satin ribbons are passe for this purpose.—Good Housekeeping.

Likely.—Ice dealer to applicant—Ever been in the ice business, boy?

Boy—No, sir.

Boy—Seventy-five cents, sir.

Ice dealer—H'm. You seem a likely lad. I guess I'll give you a trial.—Life.

HOW TO SAVE THE HAIR.

A young gentleman whom we never suspected of vanity, but whose evident tendency to baldness we have often deplored, asks us how to preserve the hair. He requests that our reply be strictly confidential, but knowing the character of the postmistress of this town, we prefer to run no risks, and accordingly answer in cold type.

There are several well-accredited methods of preserving the hair. Personally we have tried none of them, but have kept a careful record of those recommended by our baldest friends. To avoid any invidious distinction between them, we submit the several methods in alphabetical order:—

A—Arrogate no authority in the household.

B—Be in every night as early as a shutter can be procured.

C—Carry up coal when requested.

D— Don't dictate.

E—Eat what is set before you.

F—Fix the fire before going to bed.

G—Govern with wisdom the dog.

H—Hold your tongue when addressed.

I—Incline to instant obedience.

J—Join nothing (except stovepipe).

K—Keep off the carpet.

L—Look sweet when lulling the baby.

M—Make merry with the wood-pile.

N—Never look a new bonnet in the bill.

O—Ostracise yourself when the sewing circle meets.

P—Practice perfect patience.

Q—Quash every querulous question.

R—Render yourself scarce in house-cleaning time.

S—Spend and be spent for the Sisters of Timbuctoo and the Home for Incurable Hottentots.

T—Tend the door.

U—Upset nothing.

V—Vanish when callers come.

W—Watch the kerosene lamp and don't let it smoke.

X—Xplain when called upon.

Y—Yearn for mother-in-law.

Z—Zenus, remember, often and again gave in to Juno; and he had ambrosial locks.—Burlington (Vt.) Free Press.

Two of a kind.—"I saw such a beautiful sky this afternoon," he said dreamily, as they sat and made love together. "Was it blue?" she inquired eagerly. "Yes, love, with a delicate white fleece." "And, O, Harry, did it have lovely, soulful eyes and dear little cunning black nose?" "I am talking of heavenly blue sky," he said, gravely. "That's the kind, dear! Oh, wont you try and get it for me. I'm just dying to have a blue skye! They are such sweet pets."—Detroit Free Press.

Still Both were Happy.—They were young lovers, and as they strolled through the Ramble in Central park the future looked very bright and pleasant to them.

"That is a dogwood tree, my love," he said touching it lightly with his stick.

"How do you know it is a dogwood tree, George, dear?"

"I can tell by its bark, my darling," and then a policeman ordered them off the grass, and they were very, very happy.—Life.

He may be going to take up a 90-day note that is so close to a protest that the recording angel is listed to hear the notary swear.—Burdette, in Brooklyn Eagle.

Some Days.

There are days of deepest sorrow,
In the season of our life,
There are wild, despairing moments,
There are hours of mortal strife;
There are times of stormy anguish,
When the tears refuse to fall,
But the waiting time, my brothers,
Is the hardest time of all.

Youth and love are oft impatient,
Seeking things beyond their reach;
And the heart grows sick with hoping,
Ere it learns what life can teach;
For, before the fruit be gathered,
We must see the blossoms fall;
And the waiting time, my brothers,
Is the hardest time of all.

Loving once and loving ever,
It is sad to wait for years
For the light whose fitful shining
Makes a rainbow of our tears.
It is sad to count at morning
All the hours to even-fall;
Oh, the waiting time, my brothers,
Is the hardest time of all.

We can bear the heat of conflict,
Though the sudden, crushing blow,
Beating back our forces,
For a moment lay us low.
We may rise again beneath it,
None the weaker for our fall;
But the waiting time, my brothers,
Is the hardest time of all.

For it wears the eager spirit,
As the salt waves wear the stone,
And hope's gorgeous garb grows threadbare,
Till its brightest tints are gone,
Then, amid youth's radiant tresses,
Silent snows begin to fall;
Oh, the waiting time, my brothers,
Is the hardest time of all.

Yet at last we learn the lesson,
That God knoweth what is best,
And a silent resignation
Makes the spirit calm and blest;
For we know a day is coming
For the changes of our fate,
When our hearts will thank him meekly
That he taught us how to wait.

THE PROFESSOR.

I rang for Jane to bring my tea upstairs, and hunted for the sal volatile to compose my nerves. The new professor had arrived to deliver his first lecture to the pupils of the Heliotrope Female Academy. As the "accomplished principal,"—so the newspaper expressed it—of this great institution, I considered it my duty to have a professor of science added to my corps of teachers. It sounded well in speaking to say: "Professor East of Wisteria Academy." I must say it was the aim of my life to have everything appear much better than it really was. At a teachers' meeting we had discussed the matter. "I must stipulate for an unmarried man," I informed the ladies, "middle-aged, learned and companionable for intellectual women like ourselves." The teachers all agreed with me, but Colonel Noel, my wealthy patron, demurred at the proposed advance. He came in just as our meeting adjourned. Being a widower, and as Eva had taken her history lesson into the study to learn, I begged him to sit down and tell us how he managed his dear motherless children.

"I don't manage them; blessed if I do. I've turned them over to you ladies to manage. Keep that rascal, Jack Norris, away from my Eva; that's all I ask. Bless my heart, what can I do with a parcel of girls on my hands?"

"My dear Colonel," I said in a sympathetic tone, for he certainly glanced at me while speaking, "in my position the care of tender, innocent girls has become a lovely study. I dote upon it. The only trouble with me is that my care of them is too short."

"So it is, and a confounded shame, too," and the Colonel looked at me again, straight in the eyes.

"In my position, vigilance, wisdom and foresight are required," I said again in my most impressive manner. "I may safely claim to myself these requisites for a perfect manager to a young girl."

The Colonel laughed good-naturedly as he added: "I wager she's safe—Eva is. She'll have a fortune of her own, and that scoundrel, Norris, knows it."

"In my position," I remarked for the third time, "the ultimate good of my charges is the aim of my life. Under my roof dearest Eva is secure. Mr. Jack Norris will never attempt to outwit me. He may be a bold rascal, but Mr. Jack Norris won't venture to trifle with me."

Colonel Noel was emphatic in his assent to this assertion. "He's a dare-devil, Norris is, a wild, harum-scarum, worthless fellow, but blessed if I believe he'd have the hardihood to defy you," laughed my chief patron in that complimentary way of his, which always showed me in a quiet way his preference for myself. I had numberless answers to my advertisement for a professor, but I tossed them all aside and engaged Professor East. The moment my eyes rested upon him, I felt intuitively that the very person I desired had presented himself. So handsome, so very handsome, in spite of immense green goggles; so gentle and refined, and so good, so innocently good—I engaged him at once on the easiest terms. Indeed, Professor East declared himself so appreciative of the great advantage of enjoying our society that he almost forgot the question of salary. He was quite indifferent to money. I found him willing to come for a mere pittance, which went far to bias me in his favor, for it always does seem hard to pay out so much money to teachers. The flutter of nerves mentioned above was occasioned by the arrival of the professor. He was actually in the house. All the teachers were struck by his ingenuous manner and straightforward, beautiful candor.

"He says he never met a more charming set of ladies," observed Miss Leonard, the English teacher.

"He says the girls are not to his taste; he despises such young things. He says my eyes are lovely."

"Ma foi! Your eyes, indeed!" ejaculated Mam'selle Adele, the French teacher. "He vows my retrousse nose is piquante, charmante—ah, Monsieur is one grand gentleman."

"I don't believe in flattery," interjected Miss Wenham. "No one insults me by compliments. The professor thought I was one of the girls; indeed I never saw a man so amazed as he was when I told him I was a teacher." Miss Wenham looked every day of forty-five years.

"He is very near sighted," I reminded her.

"Not at all," said Miss Wenham. "He only wears glasses to shade his eyes, and he always says just what he thinks."

Putting on my glasses, I drew out a note. It was from the professor. I was determined to read it, merely as a check to their vanity and conceit. "Let me see," I began, quite as if the idea had at that moment occurred to me, "He says in this note, 'I am coming early to have a better opportunity of knowing a lady whom I have long admired for her talents and erudition.'" Without the slightest notice of a decidedly envious laugh, I folded the note and went to my room to read up on the miocene period. The professor was to lecture on the miocene period. After taking my seat and leaving my glasses on the table—they always made me look ten years older, I went down to see Professor East. To my amazement there sat Mam'selle Adele in her best black silk with crimson trimmings, talking in her excitable foreign way. There on the other side was Miss Leonard in her best plaid, smiling in her bland amiability. Miss Wenham in her Sunday cashmere ogled him in front. To do the professor justice, he seemed restless and in evident expectation of some one else. As he turned at once to me, I felt certain that I was the person for whom my handsome young professor waited. We discussed extinct pachyderms of the miocene period. I made some strong points, to which he yielded without argument. Miss Wenham whispered quite audibly that the professor had not a chance to put in a word.

When we were passing into the lecture room I observed that he looked at Edith Sands, who contrived to be in the way, and that she laughed rather pertly. Before I could speak to her the professor said in a low tone: "What a great figure you have, my dear lady—queenly, positively queenly."

I heard that silly Eva titter so rudely that common decorum induced me to send her to a back seat. She is considered beautiful by some people, but to my way of thinking her face is weak. Besides she has a round, chubby figure. I had it from the professor himself that he admired a queenly figure. The lecture was rather obscure, of course. I saw that the professor was very deep, but I am not sure the girls appreciated their privilege. Eva Noel turned very red and almost choked with laughter. If it had been anybody else than Professor East I might have imagined that he became a trifle mixed on the miocene strata, but then he was certainly a handsome man. By the merest accident I happened to be in the hall when the professor was putting on his overcoat, and found the teachers around him in an admiring circle. I must say that my acumen and knowledge of human nature never evinced itself so distinctly as when I engaged Professor East. He turned at once to me and spoke in the most complimentary manner of my observations of the tertiary epoch. "Nothing ever interested me so much. We must talk it over thoroughly; it is most absorbing, besides, we don't often have the advantage of such an intellect as yours to elucidate abstruse matters." Which proved how very much interested he was in the subject.

Eva Noel came in from the library for a book just as the professor closed the door behind him. I noticed that she wore a buttonhole bouquet with a jacqueminot rose and smilax, which I am positive the professor wore delivering his lecture. The artful minx must have picked it up somewhere.

"How did you come by those flowers, Miss Eva?" I demanded severely.

The girl turned very red. "Somebody gave them to me," she said, in insolent defiance.

"You wicked girl," broke in Miss Wenham; "do you remember Ananias and Sapphira? Those are the professor's flowers. Vain creature, to suppose that he would give them to a chit like you—it is shameful."

Eva reddened more and more, but I could see that she was tittering and laughing to herself while I sent her to bed. "I will speak to Eva to-morrow. She can't trifle with me. I do believe I can see through a millstone. No one can blind me," I said in a tone of deep meaning.

"Some one ought to give the professor a hint of Eva's duplicity," suggested Miss Leonard.

"Perhaps it would be just as well to give him a hint of her shocking behavior toward that dissolute wretch Jack Norris," supplemented Miss Wenham.

"I shall certainly do so" I returned in emphatic approval. "Professor East must be warned—he is such a good man—such an innocent, unsuspecting disposition—we must take care of him. I do flatter myself I am a judge of men—yes, he must be told about Eva Noel."

The teachers agreed with me perfectly; indeed, I could not recollect when we were all so unanimous upon any subject. I thought over all I had to say to the professor, until I had arranged quite a happy and affecting way of putting it. Plainly it was my duty to secure the professor against the arts and wiles of this weak, pretty face—a girl without the faintest claim to a queenly figure.

Professor East arrived much earlier than was expected. However, the moment I heard of it I saw my opportunity to give him a precautionary hint about Eva's indecorous, artful ways. The parlor door was partly open, and the professor's voice audible from within. I had the curiosity to stop and listen. My position demand watchfulness.

"Don't be alarmed," he was saying, "my luck never wavers. That old dragon is no match for me.'

"But I'm dying with fright all the time. How can you do it."

The voice was no other than Eva's. She broke off into a laugh, but turned first red, then pale, when I walked in, holding myself very erect and assuming my most commanding aspect. It evidently impressed the professor, for he put on his immense green glasses and at once began to talk to me of the fossils of the tertiary epoch. I made my points about extinct pachyderms while I had a chance. They were telling and powerful, and, I must say, delivered in an eloquent and scientific style. I had been awake until two in the morning reading upon the subject. Professor East turned his head on one side, then the other, and looked meditative.

"I am lost in admiration; it is your figure—the form of Juno—superb! inspiring! he suddenly declared, with the delightful, ingenious candor which I discovered from the very first was a beautiful trait of his disposition.

"Don't flatter me, you dear naughty man!" I exclaimed, as I shook my head at him.

"Flattery?" he retorted: "I am an unsophisticated fellow, always letting some truth slip out and giving offence. Ah me, I know you are furious."

"Don't apologize, the truth will slip out," I said very kindly; he did look so wonderfully handsome, even with those hideous green glasses on. "We quite understand each other, and I may say are so congenial that we are sometimes imposed upon. I feel it my painful duty to warn—yes really warn—you against a pert, forward, insolent girl as shallow and vain as a peacock."

The professor came a step near. "I think I know who you mean," he whispered. I fairly lost my temper—not with the professor—not at all, he was so good-looking, but with that abandoned girl trying to attract his attention. It was scandalsus.

"She is an unprincipled, designing creature," I went on.

"And so desperately homely," he added.

"I knew you must think so," was my triumphant reply: "but would you believe it, some people call Eva Noel pretty?"

"Where have I heard that name?" he questioned thoughtfully. "Oh, I have it—the little girl just now I scarcely noticed; very ordinary, is she not?" "Fearfully so," I assured him. "She has been badly compromised by a shocking affair with a dissolute scoundrel, Jack Norris. I watch her very closely. The miserable knave can't trifle with me. I beg you to remember that this is a mark of my confidence, purely confidential. I mean to outwit that rascal Norris, and, of course, can't allow you to be taken in. Come to me if Eva speaks, or even looks at you, my dear professor. I will protect you."

The teachers interrupted me by coming in at that moment, but the professor pressed my hand gratefully and thanked me in the sweetest way as he went out to the lecture-room. It quite startled and kept me awake long after my hour for retiring, and then, late as it was, I caught a glimpse through the window of Professor East moving through the shrubbery, in the moonlight, gazing up at the windows, perhaps at mine. The professor is so unsophisticated, so innocent, and so very good.

* * * * * * * *

I believed I mentioned above how perturbed and broken my rest was on that eventful night. Several nights have passed since, but as far as I can see there is no prospect of anything but wakeful nights for a long time. I slept rather late the morning after the night that unprincipled, heartless, wicked man delivered his last—shall I call it a lecture?

Miss Leonard met me in the study, a subdued excitement visible about her. Eva Noel must have gone home without leave; the servants have seen nothing of her; the girls professed equal ignorance. She had not been seen since retiring the night before. It was mysterious. In my position mystery was not to be borne. I sent a messenger to Eva's home. The messenger returned with the appalling news that Eva had not been at home. I had the cellars and garrets searched, the cistern dragged, the clothes-presses examined, and even the great soap-kettle raised to see if she could be underneath. To no purpose. Miss Leonard rushed suddenly into the study and handed me a note. It explained all:—

DEAR MADAM—I have relieved you of the care of Eva Noel. We were married this morning. I don't charge you a cent for my two lectures. I'll even finish the course if you will post me on extinct pachyderms.

JACK EAST NORRIS.

Professor East and Jack Norris were one and the same. The perfidious wretch! Where is the sal-volatile?

A PREACHER'S STORY AT THE EXPENSE OF A FULTONITE.—My friend, the preacher, tells a good story at the expense of a Fultonite. At one time in the early days of his ministry he served for a week in a little mountain village near the Maryland border of Fulton county. He found that his flock was godly and quiet, but very, very Dutch. Most of the people in the congregation spoke a broken patois of German and English mixed. One day he called upon a little old woman who was lying at home very sick. They conversed together with more or less success for a while, and got to the subject of a great length of time that the sick woman had been in the Lutherian church. She had been a Lutherian for some sixty-five years.

"Why that is a long time, Mrs. Baning," said the minister.

"Yah," piously returned the old lady, "it beats the devil how long I've been a Lutherig!"—Kansas City Journal.

THE CAB DRIVER'S MISTAKE.—Inspector Brynes, while in civilian's dress, overheard a cab driver overcharge a fare. Getting into the vehicle he said:

"Drive to the City Hall."

"What will I get?" asked the cute driver.

"About 10 days."

And he got it, too.—Texas Siftings.

The Kiss in the Tunnel.

They were sitting five seats back, but I plainly heard the smack,
As we dashed into the tunnel near the town,
And the currents of my veins ran like gushing April rains,
Though I'm grave and gray and wear a doctor's gown.

Once—alas! so long ago—on the rails I journeyed so,
With a maiden in a jaunty jersey sacque.
And I kissed her with my eyes, as the timid stars the skies,
But I longed, oh! how I longed for one real smack!

Did she know it? I dare say! (She'd a sweet clairvoyant way
In the glancing of her eyes so bright and blue.)
Ne'er a bee such honey sips as the nectar on her lips;
But I longed, and longed in vain, as on we flew.

Just as yearning reached its height, lo! there came a sudden night,
And like steel to magnet clove my mouth to hers!
I shall never more forget how like drops of rain they met,
In the bosom of the rose that lightly stirs!

When we came again to light, both our faces had turned white—
White as clouds that float in summer from the south,
Missed I glances, missed I smiles! but on air I rode for miles,
With the sweetness of love's dew upon my mouth.

So the kiss that some one stole, in that rayless Stygian hole,
While with loud imprisoned clangor on we rushed,
Caused the sluggish streams of age, with young madness leap and rage—
And my wife, restored to daylight, laughed and blushed.

IS BOSTON TO BE A PRIEST-RIDDEN CITY?

We are not among those who join in a periodical scare about Catholic ascendancy, as though everything was going to rack and ruin because of the immense Catholic immigration, and the predominance of Catholic influence in the government of many of our large cities. Still, some recent events, to say the least, look as though the time had come for a strong and united protest against priestly interference and Popish rule. The most recent event of this sort is the exclusion from the Boston public schools of a text-book which has long been used, simply because it has recently been discovered that one short paragraph in it is objectionable to the Romish priests. The book in question is Swinton's Outline History of the World, a most excellent text-book, as all admit, and the objectionable paragraph relating to the sale of indulgences just prior to the Reformation, is as follows:

"When Leo X. came to the papal chair he found the treasury of the church exhausted by the ambitious projects of his predecessors. He therefore had recourse to every means which ingenuity could devise for recruiting his exhausted finances, and among these he adopted an extensive sale of indulgences, which in former ages had been a source of large profit to the church. The Dominican friars, having obtained a monopoly of the sale in Germany, employed as their agent, Tetzel, one of their order, who carried on the traffic in a manner that was very offensive, and especially so the Augustinian friars."

If a milder and more dispassionate statement of a hideous, historic evil could be made, we would like to hear it. It hardly seems credible that, at the beck of a Catholic priest, without a protest from any of the members of the board, such a valuable book should be dropped from the list of books to be used in our public schools. To be sure it is said that at the meeting of the board which dropped the book, twelve of the committee present were Catholics, and only six were Protestants. That may be a reason why the vote was carried, but it is no reason why loud protest may not be offered against priestly intolerance in this old city of the Puritans.—Golden Rule.

CAPTURING A SCHOOL-MA'AM.

"Yes," said the young man as he threw himself at the feet of the pretty school teacher. "I love you and would go to the world's end for you."

"You could not go to the end of the world for me, James. The world, or the earth, as it is called, is round like a ball, slightly flattened at the poles. One of the first lessons in elementary geography is devoted to the shape of the globe. You must have studied that when you were a boy."

"Of course I did, but——"

"And it is no longer a theory. Circumnavigators have established the fact."

"I know, but what I meant was, that I would do anything to please you. Ah! Minerva, if you knew the aching void——"

"There is no such thing as a void, James. Nature abhors a vacuum; but admitting that there could be such a thing, how could the void you speak be a void if there was an ache in it."

"I meant to say that my life will be lonely without you; that you are my daily thought and my nightly dream. I would go anywhere to be with you. If you were in Australia or at the North Pole I would fly to you——"

"Fly! it will be another century before men can fly. Even when the laws of gravitation are successfully overcome, there will remain, says a late scientific authority, the difficulty of maintaining a balance——"

"Well, at all events," exclaimed the youth, "I've got a pretty fair balance in the savings bank and I want you to be my wife. There!"

"Well, James, since you put it in that light, I——"

Let the curtain fall.—Protector.

IT TAKES A WOMAN TO MANAGE.—Husband—"I don't feel much like taking a vacation this year. I don't see how I can afford it."

Wife—"There's no need of your taking a vacation this year, dear; that can all be arranged very nicely."

He—"Why what do you mean?"

She—"Why, I can run down to the seashore and up into the country for a couple of months, you know, and you can sleep at home and take your meals down town. How easy that will be!"—Lowell Citizen.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, JULY 20, 1888.

CALVIN S. BRYCE of Ohio has been elected chairman of the Democratic national committee.

THE New York Legislature has been convened in extra session this week, to provide funds for carrying on work in the state prisons.

REPORTS from Gen. Sheridan show no particular change, and are so colorless as to give rise to the fear that he is struggling with an enemy which always conquers.

THE Moody school at Northfield closed Sunday evening. Intense interest has been manifested in the meetings, and ninety fellows go away pledged to foreign missionary work.

CRANKS who go to Niagara Falls intending to cut up didos in the rapids or whirlpool will be suppressed hereafter, the police having been ordered to arrest all fools bent on such suicidal errands.

Two years ago the Knights of Labor were estimated to number 720,000. Now the number is placed at 340,000. Progress like this will soon put the finishing touches upon this once powerful organization.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND seems to feel that he must veto every pension bill that comes to him, on the theory that every such bill passed by Congress is necessarily bad. Many of his messages sound as if written by a sharp lawyer rather than a statesman.

A ROUSING demonstration of the Republican leagues of the state is to be held in Boston some time in October, with addresses by the best speakers in the country, Mr. Blaine among the rest, probably.

THERE is a good deal of talk now-a-days about perpetuating the "war taxes." Since 1868 the Republicans have extended the free list so that the value of goods imported free of duty has risen from $14,000,000 to $228,000,000, a little matter of more than 1600 per cent. It would appear that the war taxes are not being perpetuated to a very alarming extent.

A FIENDISH plot has been discovered in Chicago just in time to prevent its consummation. Three Bohemians, John Hronek, Frank Chapek and Frank Chebowa, were arrested Tuesday, and a quantity of dynamite bombs were found in Hronek's house. Since the execution of Spies and his associate conspirators the anarchists have been planning revenge, and were about ready to kill the judge, prosecuting attorney and Inspector Bonfield, the prime mover in the arrests of the Haymarket affair, the plan being to blow up their houses with dynamite, and institute a reign of terror. Chebowa has made a full confession. It is believed that the number of anarchists has doubled since the executions, and that they now number 5000, fully armed with rifles, bombs and dynamite. Mrs. Parsons, widow of one of the executed murderers, went into a frenzy when she heard of the arrests, and declared that if Grinnell and Gary (the prosecuting officer and judge) were not killed soon she would do it herself, and added, pointing to her ten-years-old son: "What do you suppose I am raising him for? I shall teach him that his father was murdered, and by whom, and those red-handed butchers had better look out." If the author of such language cannot be looked up under existing laws, one should be framed speedily which will permit it. This bloodthirsty spirit of anarchy is likely to make chicago more trouble than she has yet had if it is not suppressed.

Governor Ames.

The illness of Gov. Ames has been so severe as to suggest the possibility that he might decide not to run again for the governorship, but a marked improvement in his condition, with the prospect that he will soon be able to resume his official duties, is followed by a semi-official announcement that he will be in the field for renomination. The people of the state will rejoice in his improvement, and wish for him many years of health and enjoyment. But there is a growing feeling throughout the commonwealth that the governor is trespassing on good nature to ask another term. It is not forgotten that when Mr. Ames first sought a nomination he was going to be fully satisfied with one term,—and he would have had to be content with that but for the easy-going complaisance of the convention which renominated him. There is no particular fault to be found with his administration, but it is not the highest compliment attainable to say of an official that he has done a great deal better than we feared he would. Nobody will contend that the governor has displayed any unusual measure of talent, or done a whit better in his high office than hundreds of other men in the state could do,—men who would be dumbfounded by an intimation that they were qualified for the governorship. But Gov. Ames's modesty does not run in that direction, and he regards a third term due him just as much as to Gov. Robinson, Gov. Long, and other distinguished occupants of the executive chair. It remains to be seen whether the Republican party is of the same mind, and will weakly yield to his desires and accept him as its candidate again, or will rise to better things, and infuse new life and enthusiasm into the campaign by nominating such a man as Gen. Draper, a man of commanding ability, and a veteran with an excellent war record. With an old soldier at the head of the national ticket and another at the head of the state ticket, the Republicans would sweep the state with a tidal wave of enthusiasm.

A dwelling-house at Danbury, Conn., was saturated with kerosene Monday night in fifteen places and set on fire. There were nine persons asleep in the house, who narrowly escaped a horrible death.

A newly gilded dome of the state house at Boston will be one of the glories of the autumn. Spread with 120,000 leaves of gold leaf it will be again as resplendent as it was fourteen years ago.

An unknown fishing schooner containing about 20 men was run down on the Newfoundland banks by a steamer last Saturday morning.

There will be a total eclipse of the moon next Sunday night, beginning at 10.55.

A large number of the new mail boxes, recently added to the post office, have been rented.

Two fires in five days, and the department called out twelve times since April 10. Really, we are getting quite metropolitan.

So it seems that there is a fire-bug working in town. Well, he may try it once too many times, and it is to be hoped he will get caught at it.

A clam-bake, with a quiet game of "draw" afterward, was indulged in at the Glen last Sunday by some of the "best young men" of the village.

The choir of the Second Congregational church will enjoy a tally-ho coach drive to Ludlow next Wednesday, where they will be entertained by W. F. Miller.

The Second Baptist Sunday-school was to have held its annual picnic at Forest Lake Garden to-day, but postponed it to next Tuesday on account of the rain.

The officers have not yet obtained any clue that will lead to the arrest of the persons who fitted a false key to one of the boxes and rang in an alarm on the night of July 4.

Two carloads of children, sent out by the New York Tribune fresh-air fund, came down the New London Northern road from Brattleboro Monday afternoon, en route for New York city.

W. F. Tracey has closed his confectionery store in Caryl Brothers' block for lack of sufficient patronage. He expects to have a clerkship in Springfield.

The grandchildren of W. N. Flynt of Monson were given a pleasant drive in J. W. Weeks's tally-ho coach Monday afternoon. The children were all photographed in a group just before the drive.

The secretary's book of the cemetery association is ready for the reception of members' names, and can be found at the JOURNAL office. Every adult in the village should be a member of this association.

A freight car standing in the yard of the Boston & Albany Railroad Company was broken into Tuesday night and eleven bottles of lager beer stolen. The officers believe they have some clue to the thieves.

The local fire department is constantly receiving words of commendation for its efficiency and alertness. It has attended 11 fires this year, and in every instance it has managed to get control of the flames.

Julius Esplen, employed at the works of the Palmer Wire Manufacturing, Company caught his thumb in one of the machines while at work last Saturday, and had the end cut off. Dr. William Holbrook attended him.

Palmer Lodge, I. O. O. F., has elected the following officers: N. G., E. S. Osborne; V. G., C. L. Alexander; recording secretary, J. K. Conant; permanent secretary, H. W. Norcross. The installation occurred last Friday evening.

The Christian Endeavor Society of the Second Congregational church, of which Dr. G. H. Wilkins is president, sent him a letter of condolence this week in recognition of his illness. The society also held a business meeting at the church parlors this week.

Both the incandescent and arc systems of electric lights are giving excellent satisfaction. Some of the business places that had one in the first place are discarding the kerosene lamp and putting in more. Some of the private residences will be lighted by the new system shortly.

A notice has been put up in the post office to the effect that owners of call boxes are hereafter to call the number of their box at the delivery window when they wish their mail, and not designate the box by pointing to it from the outside, as has been the practice heretofore.

John Roach, a member of the Wide-Awakes, was seriously injured at Monson last Saturday by being hit upon the head with a ball during the game there. His condition was critical at one time this week, and fears were entertained that he could not recover, but he is now out and improving.

Vice President Langdon of the Central Vermont Railroad, with ex-Secretary of State Nichols of Vermont, and their families, came down over the New London Northern Railroad Tuesday afternoon and remained here over night in their private coach "Bellevue," proceeding on their journey to Block Island Wednesday morning.

Dr. Sarah M. Wilbur, who received the degree of Ph. D. at the last commencement of Rutgers Female College, New York city, has resigned her position at the state primary school, where she has been resident physician for the past two years, and on August 1st goes to New York to assume charge of the Woman's and Children's Hospital, where she has been appointed head physician.

Mrs. W. T. Ingram, a sister of Andrew Pinney and quite well known here, was found dead in bed at Eastern Point, near New London, yesterday morning, where she was spending the summer. Her death is attributed to heart-disease, and her illness extended over a period of about ten days, although she was not thought to have been seriously sick. She resided in Troy, N. Y., and was about 53 years of age.

This village presents peculiar attractions to the impecunious yet thirsty desirer of the ardent. All he has to do is to walk along the north side of Main street from Thorndike street to Central, and by slowing up his steps at certain points he can get drunk on the odor which comes to him. But to the people who despise and detest the stuff this condition of the street is anything but pleasant. Yet they must endure it if they do any shopping at all.

Chief Engineer Hitchcock of the Palmer Fire Department has been notified that the law requires the provision of a life-saving net, chute and other apparatus, to be taken to every building over two stories high where a fire occurs; the same to be secured by the fire district on or before Nov. 1 of the current year. Failing to comply with this statute will result in the imposition of a heavy fine. The new skids for loading the steamer upon a flat car are finished and in readiness for use.

A Republican Club.

The adjourned meeting held at the town house Monday evening to take some action upon the matter of organizing a Republican club was attended by a fair number of voters, considering the place of holding the meeting. J. S. Holden was chosen chairman and W. C. Greene secretary. A committee consisting of Dr. Silas Ruggles, Captain H. E. W. Clark, C E. Fuller, L. E. Moore and S. S. Carter was then appointed to report a list of officers for the club, subject to the approval of the meeting. The following is the list submitted and elected: President, W. C. Greene; vice presidents, J. S. Holden, Dr. Silas Ruggles, Dr. H. A. Smith and E. G. Murdock; secretary, H. N. Sedgwick; treasurer, L. E. Moore; executive committee, Dr. H. A. Smith, J. S. Holden, Dr. Silas Ruggles, E. G. Murdock, H. E. W. Clark, F. A. Packard and G. C. Buell; finance committee, A. B. C. Deming, C. E. Fuller, G. C. Buell and O. B. Smith. To the executive committee was assigned the duty of soliciting members for the club. An adjourned meeting will be held next Monday evening at 7.30 o'clock at the town house, when the matter of having a demonstration for Harrison and Morton will be considered. The organization will be known as the Republican Club of Palmer, and promises to have a large membership.

Two More Fires.

The fire department was called out about 12.45 a. m. Monday by an alarm from box 57, pulled in by the watchman at the depot for a blaze at Blanchardville. The boys had a hard run for a mile, and then found the fire to be in the old ice house belonging to J. A. Squier, which has not been in use for several years, and which was valueless except for the timber it contained. Loss was about $200, no insurance. The fire was doubtless incendiary.

Another alarm was pulled in from box 57 about 1 o'clock this morning, for a fire in a small house owned by C. E. Dewey on Dublin street. A stream was soon on the building, but the fire worked in between partitions and was hard to get at. Everything was soaked by yesterday's rain, and there was little wind, so the danger of the fire spreading was slight. That the fire was incendiary there is no doubt. Two Gaffney boys living near heard a man run down the street, and looking out the window found the house on fire on the piazza near the front door. In the attic the firemen found kerosene plentifully scattered about, and a can containing about a pint of the fluid. The outside of the building had also been liberally sprinkled with the stuff before the fire was lighted. The building was a one-story affair, and had not been occupied for some time, the doors and windows all being open. There was $500 insurance on the structure, which will cover the loss.

Death of a Well-Known Townsman.

J. H. Smith, a well-known citizen and business man of this town, died very suddenly of pleurisy and other internal complications at his late residence on Central street yesterday afternoon after an illness of only one week. The deceased was born at Holden in 1838, and entered Shelburne Falls Academy at an early age, where he acquired an education and thorough business training. He located in Palmer in 1875, at once engaging in the manufacture of shoddy, which he followed with success until his death, carrying on the business in the old mill at Blanchardville for a period of ten years, and in the new brick mill which was erected two years ago on the site of the old plow handle factory near Fay's bridge. He has ever been regarded as a genial and upright citizen, always loyal to his fellowmen and one whom the community and a large circle of friends will miss. He was an active member of Thomas Lodge, F. & A. M., the Daughters of Rebekah, Order of Iron Hall, L. L. Merrick Post, G. A. R., and Palmer Lodge, I. O. O. F., being a past-master of the latter organization, while he has held important offices in the other societies above named. His funeral will be held Sunday at 2 o'clock p. m., at his late residence, with Masonic ceremonies, while the other societies with which he was connected will probably attend in a body. The remains will be conveyed to Holden on the following Monday for interment. The deceased leaves a widow and three daughters, who have the sympathy of the entire community in their bereavement.

Base Ball.

The Palmers expect to play the Brattleboros soon.

Cotter and Kane, the Palmer's battery, expect to enter the New England League next season.

The Wide Awakes will go to Ware tomorrow morning to cross bats with the Ware Juniors.

The Worcesters have several open dates and would like to arrange a game with the Palmers before the league season closes.

Manager Kenefick of the Palmers contemplates arranging a game with the Bostons and the Globe Newsboys before the season is over.

The Wide Awakes of this place won the much-talked of match at Monson last Saturday afternoon by defeating the Monson Academy nine, the score standing 17 to 4.

The business men chose sides and played ball on the park Wednesday afternoon. The score was 18 to 0 for seven innings, but the losing side managed to get three runs in the first half of the eighth, and then gave up the game.

The Palmers will meet the Chicopee Amateurs on the park to-morrow afternoon at 3 o'clock in a match game of ball. An interesting contest is assured, as the visiting team is one of the ablest in Western Massachusetts, and has won many laurels during the present season.

The quietude which prevailed in town last Saturday evening can be attributed to there being no game of ball. The Palmers would have played had it not been for the disability of Shackley and Kane, whose broken fingers may prevent them from participating in to-morrow's game, although they are in a little better condition than at one time last week.

Interesting to Tax-payers.

The assessors have finished their work, and the tax list is in the hands of the collector, the total amount to be collected being $57,539,92. There are 515 horses in town, 649 cows, 135 sheep, 368 neat cattle, 106 swine, 861 dwelling houses, 17,698 acres of land. The club claims to have been shamefully treated by their opponents, insulted and called names, and refused the guaranteed money after the game, which the Northampton club threw up at the end of five innings, refusing to play longer. ### JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, July 18, 1888.

The passing change in the political situation caused by the illness of Gov. Ames has nearly gone by. To-day the governor is better than he has been for weeks, and the outlook now is that he can be removed to his home in North Easton by Saturday, or early next week. Meanwhile there is much activity on the part of his opponents, and they are making strong claims of what they have already accomplished. One of the Draper leaders, who has been a prominent member of the Legislature, said within a short time that they were already sure of 100 more than a majority in the convention. As it is yet six weeks before the delegates to the convention are elected, this certainly is open to the charge of being "too previous." Letters are being sent out to all parts of the state by the Draper men, and many of them get back to the friends of Gov. Ames, who send them in just to let these friends know what the Draper men are doing. From what is known of the men who are claimed as sure for Draper, when really they are not, it is evident that the movement is stronger on paper than it is in reality, for many men who are said to be really for Draper are not so, or are decidedly for Ames.

Yet it is doubtless true that much encouragement has been received by the Draper managers,—most active of whom are Fred H. Williams of Foxboro and Joseph O. Bartlett of Hingham. It is said that in Berkshire county they found much help, and that they are well represented all over the state, especially in the manufacturing centers. It is stated on authority which I would accept on this matter about as soon as Gen. Draper himself, that he is not going to put out his money freely to secure the nomination. It has been the supposition that he would, and that the workers who are in politics for what money they can make would flock to his support. But if he keeps his purse-strings tightly drawn, it will make a decided difference in the activity of some men.

So far as Speaker Noyes is concerned, he is in the field by his own published declaration, and he tells his friends they have no idea of the "tremendous undercurrent" there is for him, but I have nowhere been able to see signs of its tremendousness, nor hardly even of its existence. Of its being mostly "under," there can be no doubt. If the truth were known in regard to Gov. Ames's interests, I believe it will be found that Col. Campbell has not been idle while his excellency has been ill.

The chief event of the week here has been the annual meeting of the National Prison Association. Its sessions have been held in the hall of the House of Representatives, the use of which was voted by the Legislature before its recent adjournment. At every session the hall has been well filled, and a large proportion of the audience has been women. Official representatives of states and members of the association have been present from all parts of the country, and among the speakers have been men from South Carolina, Alabama, Texas, and most of the Northern states. Whatever the Southern representatives had to say was of much interest. They were plain men with no fuss nor feathers, honestly endeavoring to get what light they could for the management of their convicts. They recognized the fact that the time for the leasing system has gone by, that it is barbarity to lease their convicts out to contractors whose only concern is to make the most possible money out of them at the least possible cost. In South Carolina the lease system has been given up. What was also noticeable about some of the Southern speakers was their desire for fraternal union with the North. They believe that the barriers are forever removed, and are willing to go more than half way in their advances.

Ex-President R. B. Hayes has presided at all of the sessions thus far, and it is clear that he has a strong hold on the respect and confidence of the audience. Of course it is to be supposed that he is familiar with parliamentary law, but he prefers to manage by courtesy than rather the enforcement of technical rules. He prefers to have a man yield the floor willingly rather than to force him to sit down. So he always gives an opportunity, and he has succeeded admirably. In personal appearance he is not the dark complexioned man I imagined from his pictures. His hair and beard are white, and his face is florid, so that he makes a striking appearance. He is very quiet and undemonstrative in manner, yet evidently alert and vigorous. Repeated allusions have been made during the week by several speakers to his former high position, and they have always called out sympathetic applause. I believe there is a growing opinion that in the political contests of the times scant justice has been done to the statesmanlike accomplishments of Hayes's administration, and that the verdict of history will be more favorable than the judgment of his contemporaries.

Next Tuesday the Republicans will hold their first great rally of the campaign. It will be in Tremont Temple, and it is intended to have some of the speeches available for campaign material. Efforts are being made to get speakers from Congress, or elsewhere outside the state, but up to this afternoon nothing had been arranged which can be published. Dr. Burden will call to order as chairman of the state committee, and the home speakers who have been secured are Lieut.-Gov. Brackett and Congressman Lodge.

The Democrats are doing very little and will make no attempt to begin their work till about September. They have Congressman Mills's speech at their headquarters, which they distribute to people as they come in, if any one wishes a copy, but they are not sending out any through the mails. There is a remarkable lack of enterprise for a party which professes such expectations of triumph.

The Prohibitionists are busy. It is a way they have had for several years, though they know they cannot do anything which will be felt in either branch of the state government. They are getting many orders for their campaign flags, which are procured at reduced rates, and propose to raise a campaign fund by getting a dollar for every prohibitory voter of 1887.

I have been a great sufferer from catarrh for over ten years; had it very bad, could hardly breathe. Some nights I could not sleep—had to walk the floor. I purchased Ely's Cream Balm and am using it freely, it is working a cure surely. I have advised several friends to use it, and with happy results in every case. It is the one medicine above all others made to cure catarrh, and it is worth its weight in gold. I thank God I have found a remedy I can use with safety and that does all that is claimed for it. It is curing my deafness —B. W. Sperry, Hartford, Conn.

A WOMAN'S DISCOVERY.

"Another wonderful discovery has been made, and that too by a lady in this county. Disease fastened its clutches upon her and for seven years she withstood its severest tests, but her vital organs were undermined and death seemed imminent. For three months she coughed incessantly, and could not sleep. She bought of us a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption and was so much relieved on taking first dose that she slept all night and with one bottle has been miraculously cured. Her name is Mrs. Luther Lutz." Thus write W. C. Hamrich & Co., of Shelby, N. C.—Get a free trial bottle at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store. 2

Abraham Hare, druggist, Bellville, Ohio, affirms: "The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my 20 years' experience, is Electric Bitters." Thousands of others have added their testimony, so that the verdict is unanimous that Electric Bitters do cure all diseases of the Liver, Kidneys or Blood. ## Never Despair

Until you have tried what Ayer's Pills can do for you. It is the Liver that renders your views of life so gloomy. Depend upon it, a box or two of Ayer's purely vegetable, sugar-coated, Cathartic Pills would materially change your feelings, and still make

LIFE WORTH LIVING.

Lucius Alexander, Marblehead, Mass., says: "I was severely afflicted with Dyspepsia and Enlargement of the Liver, most of the time being unable to retrain any solid food on my stomach. Three boxes of Ayer's Pills cured me."

"Ayer's Pills are a sure cure for Liver Complaint. Nothing seemed to help me until I finally began to take Ayer's Pills."—E. S. Fulton, Hanover, N. H.

CURE OF CANCER AND ULCERS.

Judge T. C. McLendon writes to the Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga., under the date of February 14, 1888: "About three years ago, Jerry Bradley, a colored man, had a cancerous sore on his face, near the right eye. It caused him a great deal of pain, and he lost the sight of the eye, but was finally cured of the cancer by the use of Swift's Specific. This case is well-known in Wilkes Co., Ga., where he lived (near Danbury), and of this case, I, myself, had personal knowledge."

Mr. L. Cox, of Arkabutla, Tate Co., Miss., writes February 24, 1888: "I suffered a great deal from old ulcers for six years. Your medicine was recommended to me, and after using six bottles, I was completely cured. I never saw its equal as a blood purifier. My neighbors will use no other. Your medicine does even more than you claim for it. I have known it to cure cases which were thought to be hopeless. It is the best medicine made."

Mrs. A. M. Goldsmith, No. 674 Warren St., Brooklyn, N. Y., writes February 22, 1888: "I commenced using S. S. S., about three years ago. I had suffered with a sore throat for over a year, when I commenced using your remedy. I used a great many other remedies with no good results. My little girl also had sore fingers; it commenced from the quick, and then the nails would come off. We doctored her for over two years, and when I commenced using S. S. S., I thought I would see what it would do for me. I am thankful to say that it entirely cured her. It is the best remedy I know of for the blood. I really believe it was the means of saving my life. The doctor told me I had a throat disease similar to General Grant's. I cheerfully recommend it to all suffering from disordered blood. I use it now as a tonic whenever I think I need it."

Mr. B. F. George, Miford P. O., Ellis Co., Texas, writes: "I had a cancerous wart or mole on my eyelid, as large as the end of my thumb, which had the appearance of cancer, from which I suffered a long time. Seeing the S. S. S. advertised I commenced using it, and after the use of a few bottles the sore dropped out, my cancer was gone, and I was entirely relieved."

Mr. G. W. Pettis, of Aiken, S. C., writes: "I was a sufferer from cancer of the breast, and had been under the treatment of five physicians, but it did me no good. It was so bad that I had to stop work. After taking a course of S. S. S. I was entirely cured."

A Good Appetite

Is ssential to good health; but is often lost owing to the poverty and impurity of the blood and the weakening effect of the changing season. Hood's Sarsaparilla is a wonderful medicine for creating an appetite, toning the digestion and giving strength to the whole system.

"I had been troubled with pimples on my lower limbs, loss of sleep and appetite, and in fact was generally run down. After taking Hood's Sarsaparilla the pimples disappeared, my appetite was renewed, and I feel better in every respect." P. DEVLIN, S. E. corner 10th and Buttonwood Sts., Philadelphia.

"I must say Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best medicine I ever used. Last spring I had no appetite, and the least work I did fatigued me ever so much. I began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, and soon I felt as if I could do as much in a day as I had formerly done in a week. My appetite is voracious." MRS. M. V. BAYARD, Atlantic City, N. J.

THE NEW EXCELSIOR.

The shades of night were falling fast
As through the city swiftly passed
A man who cried in ringing tones—
"If ye would ease your pains and moans

By patent nostrums, dearly bought,
Because they did avail me naught—
O Pulque!"

PULQUE is a Natural Product and is NOT a Patent Medicine.

It is the pure and simple juice of the Century Plant of Mexico, unadulterated and uncompounded. Our circular gives you the testimony of a score of physicians. Get one at your druggists.

In cases of Bright's disease, Kidney troubles, Dyspepsia, Insomnia, Debility, Dropsy, and wasting diseases, it will be found invaluable.

SANFORD'S GINGER!

There is something at once touching and beautiful in the contemplation of the universal confidence reposed in SANFORD'S GINGER. And justly so.

With what alacrity it responds to the cry of distress. No cramp or pain or cold or chill has ever made a demand upon it for relief or cure that has not met with instant and grateful response.

It is sure to check any disturbance of the bowels, instantly relieves cramps and pains, prevents indigestion, destroys disease germs in water drunk, restores the circulation when suspended by a chill, a frequent cause of cholera morbus, breaks up colds and fevers, and wards off malarial, contagious and epidemic influences.

Never travel without SANFORD'S GINGER.

Fishing With a Pin.

When I was a "little shaver" with a straw hat badly worn,
(All the crown deep-crushed and dented, and the brim cross-stitched and torn,)
I used to go a-fishing, and sometimes wading partly in
Where the stream was very shallow, to catch fishes with a pin.

I would take a pin and bend it to the much-desired crook—
For it took a full-sized penny if I bought a steel-made hook—
And when the worm was on it, it was "happiness run o'er"
Just to hold it in the water, with one foot upon the shore.

I could not land a big fish—but my wishes then were small,
And the big boys with their steel hooks sometimes caught no fish at all.
But I'd often get a "nibble"—though I sometimes used to wait
And twitch in vain—then look, and see the capture of my bait.

But luck some days was better, and the shoals of small fry came,
And when I pulled the line out it was not without its game;
A "red-fin" or a shiner, I lifted out upon the grass,
And felt the thrill of greatness o'er my moistened forehead pass.

True—I've fished with better weapons, and in more exalted ways,
Since I used the feeble pin-hook in the long vanished days,
But I never took the pleasure in the landing of a "fin"
That I took in early childhood just in "fishing with a pin."

BILLY.

It was a large house—a handsome house indeed—and the spacious grounds were beautifully kept, but the faces and forms which were constantly appearing at some of its many windows, or emerging from its doorways, did not seem exactly in keeping with its stateliness. Granny Larkins, with flapping border and gay cotton handkerchief, leaned from an open casement in the second story, and called to a boy on the graveled walk below.

"See here, sonny, if you're goin' past the post office, just stop and ask if there's a letter for Mrs. Larkins, will ye? Mrs. Brigadier-General Larkins, mind! I'm expecting a silver tea-set as a testimonial from my husband's troops."

"Yes'm," answered Billy, going slowly down to the great archway gate.

"Land sakes! youngster, you needn't take it so airnest," piped the little hump-backed woman on the steps. "She never had a general for a husband, and he never had no troops, and they never had no tea-set. She's always lookin' for a letter."

Billy knew that she had been looking for one ever since he came to the place, a few weeks before, and that she made the same request of every one that she saw going toward the road. He knew the older children called her a "little out," whatever that might mean, and that the one-legged sailor always laughed as he answered.

"If I find that ere cargo, I'll bring it aboard, ma'am, never fear."

But it was Billy's habit to take things seriously. In fact it had been a very serious world to him so far, and he leaned his yellow curly head against the fence that bright Sunday afternoon, and pondered its mysteries once more. He had a fancy that the numerous little houses he saw, where only a few people lived together, were pleasanter than this large one with so many crowded into it. He dimly remembered one of these little homes, with its dainty spread table at supper time and a laughing face that had bent over him at the window while they waited for somebody else to come. He had a later and more distinct memory of the same face, white as the pillow on which it rested, and of being lifted up to kiss it, while a tremulous voice whispered, "God will care for you, my darling." Since then he had been in many places, only to stop till he could be taken somewhere else. He looked up at the black letters on the white arch over the gateway, and spelled them out as he had done before, "C-o-u-n-t-y P-o-o-r F-a-r-m." He asked Granny Larkins one day what that meant.

"Why, it means that we're poor house folks and the county takes care of us. They won't take care of me long after I get word from the general," said granny, nodding her head in a way that set her cap border flying.

"But my mother said God would take care of me," urged Billy, with an idea that he would like God's care much better than this.

"Why, so He does, child. You're an orphan, and He cares for the orphan."

"But when?" persisted puzzled Billy. "Seems as if I'd been sent to so many places to get the right ones to take care of me. When will He do it?"

The form of the question bewildered Granny. Her slender stock of coherent ideas was nearly exhausted.

"I—I ruther s'pose He's got folks to do it," she said. "Mebby some nice folks'll want a boy—me and the general, like as not, when he comes back."

The prevailing lack of faith in the general had so far affected Billy as to prevent his building any hope on the latter statement, but her suggestion of the other "nice folks" haunted him. He did wish he could find them, and he was all the more anxious this Sunday because of a bit of conversation he had overheard. The old sailor had told the hump-back woman that Billy was to sent away in a few days.

"To another work's not nigh so good as this, but it's in the county where he belongs, d'ye see; and it stands to reason every county ought to take care of its own. We don't fare too sumptuous, nohow, and they kept him here to get it settled rightly where he belonged."

The one-legged sailor was a connoiseur in the matter of poorhouses, to judge from his descriptions, and his vivid portrayal of the bad points of those he had seen, made poor Billy's blood run cold. It was such a fair world outside that gate, with soft clouds floating over the blue sky, and white daisies fringing the roadside—if only in it he could find the nice folks Granny Larkins had mentioned. He had half a mind to run away and try; and he would never come back unless he got a letter for Granny. He meant to ask for one if he saw a post office. Nobody hindered or noticed his going. In one direction the road ran straight to the town, in the other it ran away to a little village. For a moment the small bare feet paused irresolutely, then trudged villageward. He liked being alone, he liked walking, and he was quite satisfied with his choice when his slow journeying brought him at last to a grove where he could rest and gather the wild flowers that grew at his feet. After a time he was startled from his enjoyment by the sound of approaching voices. With a sudden fear of being sent back to the farm, he hid behind a growth of bushes. That grove seemed a favorite resting place, for two women who, on their way home from an afternoon meeting, stopped in the pleasant shadow and sat down on a mossy log, so near to Billy that he could hear them talk. He cared nothing for that, however, and was just impatiently wishing they would go on, when one sentence attracted him.

"Yes, he never forgets to pray for the poor and for the orphan—such a feeling prayer, too! I always like Deacon Cole."

"Please, ma'am, where does he live?" questioned an eager voice behind them.

"Oh—h!"

The two women started to their feet in alarm; but there was nothing very terrifying about Billy's head of tangled curls when once they turned to look at it, and they sat sat down again with a gasp and a laugh. Billy hardly waited for that.

"Where does that man—Mr. Cole—live? He's—he's the one I'm looking for."

"In that big white house, where you can just see the roof through the trees. Bless me, child, how you did frighten me!"

But Billy was speeding away as fast as his bare feet would carry him. A man must want an orphan pretty bad to pray for one, he reasoned; so, of course, Deacon Cole must be the one he was looking for. In blissful confidence he presented himself before the open doorway where a man sat reading, and said, simply:

"I've come!"

"So I see," said Mr. Cole, somewhat astonished. "Who are you, and what did you come for?"

"Oh, I've come to live with you," said Billy, with an assuring smile, "I'm the orphan you prayed for, but I guess you didn't think I'd get here to-night. I don't like the poorhouse."

"You don't, eh? Well!" Mr. Cole dropped his paper and slowly rose to his feet as if he could only express his surprise by standing at full height. A longer look at the little waif, and a few qutstions, solved the small mystery.

"But, my little lad," he said not unkindly but very positively, "I haven't thought of such a thing as taking a boy to live with me, we don't want one."

Billy's face had been gradually clouding under the unexpected examination, and now there swept over it a wave of bewilderment, consternation and dread. The blue eyes filled, and the child dropped hopelessly down on the porch.

"Oh, I was so sure—so sure!" he sobbed. "They said you'd prayed to take care of an orphan."

Back from the depths of a comfortable kitchen, where a tempting supper was preparing, came old Aunt Dinah.

"Laws, honey, dat ain't nuffin'; don't fret so! Don't you know folks pray de Lord to do lots of tings dey don't want de trouble ob doin' demselves? Dat's de mistake you made; don't cry, po' lamb."

Dinah was apparently intent only upon soothing the child, but Dea. Cole started as if he had been pierced with an arrow. He glanced out over his broad fields, at his full barns, and then down at the little morsel of humanity at his feet. Was Dinah right?

"Well, well, don't cry! Come in and stay to-night, anyway, and—well, we'll see what Mary says about it."

Even while he spoke he felt what she would say—what the true mother's heart, bereaved for years, could not help saying when it met this lonely little one.

So it happened the next day that Billy—washed, brushed, and arrayed in garments that bore the trace of tasteful, loving fingers—rode back to the poorhouse in Dea. Cole's carriage, to be duly transferred to his new home and parents. He found a chance to whisper joyfully to Granny Larkins:

"So, you see, it did come true what you said, and maybe your part of it will, too. Some day maybe you'll get that letter, yet."

"Oh, yes," said Granny, cheerfully, "I'm expecting that tea-set to-morrer."—Interior.

DIDN'T KNOW ALL HIS NEIGHBORS.—A distinguished clergyman once asked a gentleman to contribute money for foreign missions and received the reply:

"I don't believe in foreign missions. I won't give anything except to home missions. I want to benefit my neighbors."

"Well," responded the doctor, "whom do you regard as your neighbors?"

"Why, those around me."

"Do you mean those whose land joins yours?"

"Yes."

"Well, how much land do you own?"

"About 500 acres."

"How far down do you own it?"

"Why, I never thought of that before, but I suppose half way through."

"Exactly," was the reply, "I suppose you do, and I want this money for the Chinese, the men whose land joins your on the bottom."—Pacific.

◆

A LAWN TENNIS MISUNDERSTANDING.—Aunt Maria (just arrived)—Well, how are you young people getting on?

Maude (smarting under the loss of a set)—Oh, Charlie and I have only love so far, but I'm going in for service directly.

Aunt Maria—My dear child, don't talk like that. You can come and stay with me till he can afford to marry.—Fun.

Never Mind.

What's the use of always fretting
At the trials we shall find
Ever strewn along our pathway?
Travel on and never mind.

Travel onward, working, hoping,
Cast no lingering look behind
At the trials once encountered—
Look ahead and never mind.

What is past is past forever.
Let all fretting be resigned;
It will never help the matter—
Do your best and never mind.

And if those who might befriend you
Whom the ties of nature bind,
Should refuse to do their duty,
Look to heaven and never mind.

Friendly words are often spoken,
When the feelings are unkind;
Take them for their real value,
Pass them by and never mind.

Fates may threaten, clouds may lower,
Enemies may be combined;
If your trust in God is steadfast,
He will help you, never mind.

GLIMPSES OF FLORIDA.

ON THE "OSCEOLA," }
ST. JOHN'S RIVER. }

Your letter found me just home from Ormond, beautiful Ormond, Ormond on the Halifax, Ormond by the sea—for indeed Ormond covers every need. The Halifax river, you know, has only a little peninsula between it and the sea, and there stands the Ormond hotel—my ideal of a Florida resort—facing the Halifax river but with the sound of the ever-beating surf mingled with the music of its pines. How I wish you could stand on its broad piazza at night with me and see what a picture shows through the pines of the wide, dark river reflecting the last red flush of sunset, the little crescent moon and the lights of Ormond. But that is not the only beauty of this river—it is a stream of fire! Every fleck of the wind, every stroke of the oar, every dart of a fish throws a gleaming mass of phosphorus. That river reaps one long Fourth of July from year's end to year's end. You can hardly imagine this sport. Think of rocking on this old river in an old row boat and having everything that touched it transformed as if King Midas ruled that realm. A school of fish pass by, and every one as it darts through the water looks like fiery serpent. You eat an orange [of course this is Florida remember] and wash your fingers in molten gold. But Ormond is lovely by day or night, in doors and out. In doors the hotel has a splendid great hall, with a fire place big enough for a barbecue, and there on cool evenings blazes a great fat wood fire, the delight of all who love a genial blaze, or pop-corn. Hot days this hall is the coolest place in world, for it opens on to great broad piazzas both east and west, and always has a breeze.

Ormond is no desolation of sand, as many Florida places are, but is green with tropical verdure to the very doors of the hotel. The orange groves come up to the lawn and by following the splendid hardshell road you pass beautiful houses and groves. The road runs under grape arbors and winds through the woods of oak and palmetto at its own sweet will. And to think that this was wilderness a score of years ago! If you are interested in frontier life you must see the log cabin belonging to Mr. Anderson. There is no sham about it. It is a regular pioneer cabin built of hewn logs, with its walls decorated with rifles, axes, etc. It is a picture indeed—

> With low, wide, roof and rained-washed eaves,
> That are kissed all night by sweet bay leaves,
> And the vines cling close to each old log side
> And peep through the chinks at the glow inside,
> When the theme of many a laugh and chat
> Was the sailing points of the old "Tom Cat."

And above all things you must go on a sail in this same famous boat "Tom Cat,"—

> "On the Halifax coast both far and near > Amongst the boats 'tis the pioneer."

Like its namesake, too, its lives are nine. Such a sail as we had on the river a week ago! In truth it was "linked sweetness long drawn out." But I must hurry on, or I shall have no time to tell you of Ormond Beach. If you can't find fun enough on the shore side, you surely can on the beach. It is a place I could not have imagined before I saw it—a great sweep of hard sand with never a stone, not the least little bit of a one, nor the biggest of boulders to sit on—they are all wanting. For forty miles you can drive over this perfect road with the bluff on one side and the blue Atlantic on the other. Here they have horse-back rides, tennis parties,—think how hard the sand must be, for it makes a perfect court,—and bathing parties. Oh, such surf! And think of enjoying surf bathing in April! They have been in every day since January. Our bathing house was the noted Vera Cruz cottage, built from the wreck of that good ship. There are beach parties of every description, but I think the prettiest one I ever heard of was the dance on the beach. There were three sets of dancers, and they danced not by the light of the moon but by great fat-wood fires. Think of it! Darkness everywhere save in this charmed circle of light, or where it glinted on the white crests of surf. Oh, there is no end to things you can do at Ormond. There may be places more perfect for invalids. I don't know about that, but I know for folks who want fun, there is no place like Ormond on the Halifax. A. S.

"Well, farmer, how does this sunny weather suit you?"

"Bad. Corn's being burned up. What we need is a shower."

"Well, I guess you'll have it. A rain is predicted for to-morrow."

SOMETHING NEW IN JEWELS.

A handsome key ring recently seen was a strand of silver wire loosely tied in a loop.

A pine cone in variegated gold is a pleasing pattern for single and double prong hairpins.

Enameled flower brooches are still in good demand, and many of the older designs are selling well.

Small moonstone owl heads, with tiny ruby eyes, still meet with favor among lovers of odd scarf pins.

A handsome bar pin has four well cut Cape rubies mounted in high settings, divided by small diamonds.

An accurate copy of an ancient Roman tear-vial, in mottled oxidized silver, is a peculiar pendant for a queen chain.

Small pungents made entirely of petrified wood or "tiger eye" are a pleasant relief from the conventional cut glass.

Double-ended crystal smelling-bottles, with gold and silver caps, are now being made nearly eight inches in length.

An Egyptian head of moonstone, set in gold, the sides of the headdress being richly jeweled, makes an attractive brooch.

Lorgnettes in solid Roman and dull gold frames and holders make expensive adjuncts to the jewel case of the lady of fashion.

A tuft of grasses in variegated gold, spring from an irregular dull gold coil, set with rubies, is a costly design in scarf pins.

A mediaevial shield of polished silver resting across a lance, the handle of which serves as a pin, is a tasteful pattern in scarf pins.

A pair of branching antlers, in oxidized and bright silver, having a small rose diamond set at the tip of each spur, is a unique pattern for a brooch.

A silver crescent in mottled oxidized silver finish, and having a spray of forget-me-nots in enamel sunk into the surface, is a tasteful design in brooches.

Snake and leopard skin collars, having the ends embellished with delicately wrought silver designs, are much admired by female lovers of the odd in jewelry.

Designs in enamelled flower brooches have received an addition in the shape of a Japanese flower not unlike the wild rose. The colors are white and pink, blue and white, and mottled.

Small pocket flasks of mottled glass, in which a peculiar effect is obtained by means of tiny pieces of tinsel incorporated in the semi-opaque glass, and having silver stoppers, are much admired.

A handsome bracelet consists of squares of Roman gold linked together, each square having in the centre a pearl on a raised setting, while the four corners are set with matched turquoises.

The assortment of enamelled fish scarf pins has been extended, until now the piscatorial tastes of all can be suited. A gamey bass in natural colors, and carrying a broken snell streaming from its mouth, is a pleasing pattern.

A handsome scarf pin represents a jockey's cap having a diamond-studded peak. A large Cape rudy serves as the body, and the colored gores are reproduced by alternate smooth and rough polished facets on the stone.

A pretty and seasonable novelty in parasol handles recently seen has a hinged cover at the head, which opens with a spring, revealing a fan ready for use. It is made in both plain and frosted patterns of handsome repousse design.

Among the handsomest novelties recently shown in silver were bonbonnieres, match boxes, single and double prong hairpins, queen chains and similar articles, which, instead of the usual etched or repousse design, have flowers of enamel in natural colors sunk into a partly oxidixed surface.

An exceedingly brilliant brooch is a butterfly in transparent, highly-colored enamels. The insect is shown in a side view, and the brighter dots in its wings are admirably counterfeited by diamonds, pearls and rubies. Small green garnets, turquoises and pearls are used in combination on smaller brooches of the same design, and the effect is striking and artistic.—Jeweller's Weekly.

SOCIAL AMERICA IN 1850.

The furniture, of city houses especially, often costly enough, was almost without exception dreadful. The carpets of enormous patterns and discordant colors, and the furniture of excessively varnished rosewood or some like material, and always in "sets," were things to shudder at. The costumes of the women were in keeping with the house. Not only did the ladies wear long trousers of some white material that came so low that it was impossible for the wearers to walk without getting them in dust or mire, but the smallest girl-child was rigged out in the same preposterous garments, it being thought highly immoral for a tot of six to expose her ankles. The ladies' boots, usually of cloth, were heelless, laced at the side and came not quite to the ankle bone, while the one-button glove left the wrist bare. The nearer the female forehead reached the back of the head the lovelier, many even shaving the entire portion to enhance their "beauty." Any hair that was golden or yellow was thought almost a deformity, and a girl with sunny tresses was looked upon as hideous—was taunted as "red head,"—and generally used a lead comb or some wash to make her tresses conform as nearly as possible to the prevailing standard. All women plastered their hair in hard, flat mass tight to the skull with bandoline or some other mucilageous substance as low down as the ears, and then had it twisted in stiff wire-like spirals, or puffed out like blinders.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, JULY 27, 1888.

THIS July is said to be the coolest on record. It has been a very comfortable month, at any rate, with remarkably cool nights, and if August will do as well humanity will be thankful.

SEPTEMBER 12 has been selected as the date for the Republican state convention, and Boston as the place. Ex-Gov. John D. Long will preside, and Congressman Allen is to be chairman of the platform committee.

CHIEF JUSTICE FULLER it is at last. After a delay of nearly three months the nomination was confirmed by the Senate last Friday by a vote of 41 to 20, ten Republicans voting with all the Democrats in his favor. Both Massachusetts senators voted against confirmation.

THE Sioux Indians in the Northwest are in an ugly mood in consequence of the proposition to open and parcel out their reservation, and they threaten to resist any such scheme with force. They are a strong and savage tribe, and would make a good deal of trouble if they should go on the war path.

NORTHFIELD will again be the scene of interesting religious gatherings next week, the annual conference of Christians for Bible study, under Mr. Moody's direction, meeting August 1st and continuing in session for ten days. The meetings will be held in the girls' school buildings, about 2½ miles from Northfield, and 4 miles from South Vernon.

MR. BLAINE expects to sail for home next Wednesday in the new Inman steamer City of New York, the largest passenger ship afloat, and which developed remarkable speed in her trial trip the other day, so that she is expected to make the trip across the Atlantic in a little over six days. Republican clubs all over the country are preparing to go to New York and give Mr. Blaine a rousing reception.

BOSTON Republicans had a rousing ratification meeting in Tremont Temple Tuesday evening, with an overflow meeting in the Meionaon. Dr. Burden presided and opened the ball, and was followed by Congressman Lodge, Lieut. Gov. Brackett, Congressman Perkins of Kansas, Senator Reed of Maine, ex-Gov. Robinson, Treasurer Beard and Gen. Banks. The talking lasted for three hours, and the greatest enthusiasm prevailed.

THE Mills tariff bill passed the House last Saturday, and now goes to the Senate. There is no chance of its passing that body but a substitute will probably be prepared and adopted, embodying Republican ideas of what a revision of the tariff should be, and it is promised that it will effect a greater reduction in the revenue than the Mills bill. Nobody expects that either bill will pass both houses, but when the policy of each party has been clearly defined further action on the subject will be deferred until after the people have pronounced their verdict at the polls next November.

A GREAT ADO is being made by the Democrats over their desire to reduce taxes on the "necessities." Sugar may fairly be classed among the necessities of life, but the Mills bill places a duty of 68 per cent on it. Sugar is a Louisiana product, and Louisiana is a Democratic state. See? Most of the Northern states are Republican, hence Northern lumber, wool, salt, beans, pease, vegetables, undressed flax and lime are put on the free list. Rice, another Southern product, is protected by a modest duty of 100 per cent. And yet it wouldn't do to intimate that there is any sectional favoriteism about this measure, of course.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND sent a message to Congress Monday reviewing the fourth report of the civil service commission. He says "the path of civil service reform has not at all times been pleasant nor easy. * * * The people are, notwithstanding, to be congratulated upon the progress which has been made, and upon the firm, practical and sensible foundation upon which the reform now rests." According to the New York Tribune Mr. Cleveland has failed most completely as a reformer. Calling to mind the fact that he gained the presidency purely as a reformer, under explicit promises that abuses in the civil service should be corrected and appointments made for merit only, the Tribune gives an exhaustive record in this line, and shows by Democratic testimony how lamentably he has failed in fulfilling his pledges. A long list of improper appointments is published, of which the Tribune says:—

> This savory list includes two murderers and the tools of two others, five notorious duellists and three rioters—one to be the judge of the very court which had imprisoned him six weeks. It includes five persons who had been indicted or convicted for frauds against the revenue, appointed to be officers of the revenue service. It includes a jury fixer, a dead beat, a lawyer guilty of defrauding clients and an attorney who had cleared notorious bandits by contriving a defeat of justice, all appointed to be judges. Persons were appointed pension agents who had been indicted for violating pension laws. Persons guilty of robbing the mails were appointed postmasters or mail agents—one when appointed was in jail for robbing the very office to which he was appointed. Liquor sellers, their sons or attorneys were appointed internal revenue officials. An impeached state treasurer defrauding county treasurer, defrauding county and town treasurers, seven forgers—one of whom had served two terms for that offense, but "knew Cleveland personally"—and men guilty of robbery, embezzlement, theft, malfeasance, tapping a church till, grand larceny, bribery, obtaining money under false pretences, of a printing steal, a millage steal and a patent fraud, of keeping gambling houses and houses of resort for the vile of both sexes, of assault and battery, fist fighting and assaulting women, of assaulting a lady temperance lecturer with a club, of wife-beating, of blackmailing and selling offices and of sell official information, with an editor of a rogues' paper and a Brooklyn police officer who was dismissed for arresting in her bed at 2 a. m., a sick woman against whom there was no charge and compelling her to walk a mile to a station—all these are chosen instruments of reform. * * * * The list of criminals embraces 137, not including 22 persons guilty of political crimes, or 59 other persons directly connected with the criminal classes.

W. J. Ellsworth of Springfield, for 15 years a popular conductor on the New York and New Haven road, has been arrested for defrauding the company.

Rev. E. P. Roe, the noveist, died suddenly at his home at Cornwell-on-the-Hudson, N. Y., last week Thursday night.

The coal mining town of Roslyn, W. T., was burned Sunday, rendering the entire population of 1500 homeless.

The Union Bank of Providence has received intact the $700.000 in securities stolen by Teller Pitcher.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

It is reported that the broker's office in Strong's block will be reopened next Monday.

The vacation season is now at its height, and the village begins to appear somewhat deserted.

F. C. Hatch has improved the appearance of his Pleasant street residence by a new coat of paint.

A 12- years-old son of Albert King fell from a tree at Blanchardville Tuesday evening and broke his arm.

F. F. Marcy, the contractor and builder, is repairing the damage recently done the Baptist church by lightning.

The teachers at the state primary school are having their annual vacation, and the schools will be closed two weeks.

F. F. Marcy is constructing a two-story tenement house for Mrs. Daniel Sullivan between Thorndike and Bondsville.

The choir of St. Paul's Universalist church will sing at the state primary school Sunday morning, and Rev. F. W. Betts will address the children.

H. G. Trumble thinks he has as smart a shepherd dog as any one. It has killed 35 woodchucks this summer, and last Saturday night caught and killed a 'coon.

The residents at Blanchardville talk of circulating a petition asking the fire district to extend the line of hydrants, in order that they may have better fire protection.

A flag staff has been raised on H. G. Loomis's block on Main street, and a Harrison and Morton flag will be suspended between it and the roof of the Nassowanno House.

George N. Stone and W. A. Breckenridge have petitioned the county commissioners to award the amount of damage done their property by the Palmer water-works using Graves's pond, which adjoins their land.

One of the managers of the American Long Distance Telephone line was in town last Friday, looking over the ground with the view of establishing an office here should the business in this locality warrant it.

Quite a number from this village attended the entertainment at Three Rivers Tuesday evening, given under the auspices of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. Mrs. H. E. Huntley sang some very pleasing solos.

According to the provisions of a new law, an investigation has been held as to the cause of the fire on Dublin street last week. A slight clue regarding the kerosene has been found, and the officers hope to have the guilty party soon.

The choir of the Second Congregational church went to Ludlow Wednesday afternoon in J. W. Weeks's tally-ho coach, where they were the guests of Wilbur F. Miller, who entertained the party in a highly satisfactory manner.

Edward Johnson, for some time past employed as night clerk at the Nassowanno House, left town this morning on the 1.19 train, taking with him a quantity of clothing, cigars, liquors and $8 in change, the whole amounting to about $43.

The eclipse of the moon last Sunday night was viewed by a large number of people, who were well repaid for sitting up into the wee sma' hours by the beauty of the scene. For a large part of the time the sky was perfectly clear, affording a fine view of the phenomenon.

Bryan O'Rourke found a turtle shell in the highway near his house in the Mason district the other day, the top of the shell being handsomely ornamented with three lines of vaguely defined letters, apparently the work of nature, which he would be very glad to have somebody decipher.

Some of the heavy tax payers of the fire district who were adverse to having the system of electric lights introduced, now say that they would not have them removed for anything, and express themselves as being more than satisfied with the new method of lighting the streets. The constant cry now is that they "want more of them" on the streets where the trees are numerous and the foliage dense.

The funeral of J. H. Smith, who died last Thursday afternoon, was held at his late residence on the corner of Park and Central streets Sunday at 2 o'clock p. m. The service was largely attended, the secret societies of which he was a member were present, and the service was conducted under Masonic rites. Rev. F. W. Betts officiated, assisted by Revs. A. W. Weeks and O. R. Hunt, the latter of Anthony, R. I. The choir of St. Paul's Universalist church sang, and the floral tributes were artistic in design. The remains were conveyed to Holden Monday morning for interment, and were accompanied by a delegation from Palmer Lodge, I. O. O. F.

Dangerous Railroad Crossing.

Mr. Editor:—Is it not time that the traveling public have better protection at the railroad crossings near Tennyville, so that accidents, sad as the one on Wednesday shall not again occur? Almost every hour trains are passing both ways, besides freight locomotives are crossing and recrossing the roadway in switching and making up their trains. The park fence obstructs the view of the track at one crossing, and at the other, where two accidents have recently taken place, railroad ties are piled so high that no one can see the train till it comes dashing in upon him. It certainly seems as if the proper authorities should devise some way to avoid the danger from these death-traps. Either the roads should go over or under the track, or gates should be placed at the crossings and careful men appointed to guard them.

A. W.

Fatal Accident.

George W. Aspinwall, an old and well-known resident of this town, was struck by the 2.02 accommodation train for Springfield while driving across the Tennyville crossing Wednesday afternoon, and instantly killed. He had been on an errand and was returning homeward when the locomotive dashed into the wagon in which he was sitting, smashing that considerably and terribly mutilating his body, which was picked up by the trainmen and brought to the old Boston & Albany freight house, where it was viewed by Medical Examiner Holbook, who pronounced nearly every bone in the body broken or dislocated. The large piles of sleepers on either side of the track, where the accident occurred, prevented him from seeing the train until it was too late. Although the wagon was badly smashed, the horse escaped serious injury, and was captured in that vicinity after a lively run. The deceased was born at Mansfield, Ct., in 1821, and has twice been a representative in the Connecticut Legislature, besides having held all the highest offices in his native town. He came to Palmer in 1870, and during his residence here has accumulated considerable property by shrewdness in horse trading and by various other means, which won for him the title of "Judge," by which he was most familiarly known to the people of the village. He leaves a widow and two children, George D. Aspinwall and Mrs. H. G. Loomis, both of this place. The funeral will be held at his late residence on Pleasant street this afternoon at 3 o'clock, and his remains will be conveyed to Mansfield to-morrow morning for burial.

The Political Pot.

The adjourned meeting of the Republican Club held at the town house Monday evening was attended by about thirty citizens, and it was voted that the executive committee be empowered to take action to procure the admission of the organization to the Republican State League. The proposition to have a demonstration and flag-raising was heartly indorsed, and the following were chosen to secure speakers and appoint the time for the rally: J. S. Holden, Dr. Silas Ruggles, E. G. Murdock, C. E. Fuller and G. E. Dalrymple. The executive committee reported that already 125 persons had joined the club, and it was voted to have the committee continue the solicitation of names, also to instruct the finance committee to procure funds to defray the expenses of a rally.

Some of the Democrats of this village met in Hibernian Hall Monday evening and voted to form a Cleveland and Thurman club and to make the present campaign a remarkably lively one. An adjourned meeting will be held Monday evening at the same place.

The Palmer Wire Mill was the first to take a decided stand in the coming Presidential campaign, when the first blows for Republicanism and Protection were struck by two prominent young Democrats, A. D. Thompson and A. Cole, in cutting down a tree for a flag staff last Tuesday, under the direction of the manager and superintendent. This fact has given rise to a new verse of the old song:—

Sandy and Al were Democrats,
But only so in name,
They want Protection like the rest,
And they'll have it just the same.

The staff which stands about one hundred feet high, was erected last Wednesday and a Harrison and Morton flag will be raised next Saturday at one o'clock with appropriate ceremonies and the booming of cannon, the employes donating over $50 for the flag. The wire mill is to be congratulated for the enterprising spirit which it has displayed in this instance, and especially for its promptness in taking this step and setting so good an example, not only for the other manufacturers, but all the true Republicans of Palmer.

Base Ball.

PALMERS 10. CHICOPEE AMATEURS 8.

The Chicopee Amateurs came to this place last Saturday afternoon and met their first defeat of the season after a nine-inning contest with the Palmers, who outplayed them at every point. About 300 people viewed the game. On account of injuries Shackley did not play at all, his position at first base being filled creditably by Greene, who later was obliged to relieve Kane by going behind the bat. The feature of the game was the heavy hit made by Betts in the seventh inning, which sent in three men and won the contest. The battery work was good on both sides, and the umpiring satisfactory. The score follows:

Another local team has been organized, and will be known as Skull and Bones.

The Palmer High Schools have not met a defeat this season, and because they have such an enviable record no team can be found that cares to play with them.

Kane, the Palmer's catcher, will take a rest until he recovers the use of his fingers, and his position will be filled by Grreene.

The game between the Wide-Awakes and the Ware Juniors, at Ware Saturday afternoon, resulted in a victory for the latter team. Score, 15 to 10.

Forest Lake Garden.

Forest Lake Garden, the town's popular summer resort, is having a very good season. The new management caters to the better class of people, to which the success it has attained is largely due. A large number of picnic parties from different localities have visited the Lake this season, while numerous dates are being arranged with other parties that desire to enjoy a day's outing there before the season ends. The most attractive place upon the grounds is the well-devised and well-constructed camp of Charles E. Fish and party, on Pine Point, where a picturesque view of the Lake is obtainable. There are eight tents spread, used as cooking, dining and sleeping apartments. The interior of the different tents presents a neat, cozy and attractive appearance, and visitors take great pleasure in inspecting the little structures. The party is composed of the following persons: Charles E. Fish, wife and children, J. F. Holbrook, wife and children, Rev. F. W. Betts, wife and son, and Miss Carrie Ellis, while other guests are constantly being entertained. The party will remain in camp another month, providing the weather is favorable.

Rev. F. W. Betts will preach next Sunday at 3 o'clock p. m.

Large numbers of pond lilies are gathered daily by the visitors.

The Baptist Sunday-school of Palmer picnicked at the Lake Tuesday.

The proprietors are constantly making improvements upon the grounds.

The management expect that all the cottages will be occupied before August 15.

The Congregational society of Indian Orchard will hold its annual picnic here to-morrow.

A grand illumination of the Garden is being talked of, to occur some time during the coming month.

Several large fishing parties have taken good-sized strings of fish from the waters of the Lake this season.

The annual picnic of the Second Congregational Sunday-school of Palmer was held at the Lake Wednesday.

The Christian Endeavor society of Enfield visited the Lake last Saturday, and returned home much pleased with the place and the management.

Local Views On Tariff Reform.

A correspondent of the Boston Advertiser has been interviewing some of our manufacturers on the tariff question, after this fashion:—

> If railroad accommodations alone could build up a large manufacturing town, Palmer would be a large place, for it is on the main line of the Boston & Albany at its junction with the New London Northern and Ware River roads. The main reason why it has not grown is the absence of water power.
>
> There are, however, the Palmer Carpet Mills, J. S. Holden & Co's. woolen mill and a wire mill. In the several outlying villages which constitute part of the township there is considerable manufacturing, especially in cotton and wire goods.
>
> There is great enthusiasm here for the Republican ticket, and a Republican club is well under way toward organization. Said one of the members of the canvassing committee to the representative of the Advertiser: "I took 36 names yesterday, and among them the names of many mugwumps. I do not think there is a mugwump here that will not vote the Republican ticket this fall."
>
> At the works of the Palmer Carpet Co. the president, W. C. Dewey, and the treasurer, J. S. Holden, were seen.
>
> "Do you favor this free wool measure?" was asked.
> "We do not want any in ours," was the response, and Mr. Holden continued: "The wool-growers are just as much entitled to be protected as the manufacturers are. In fact they are more entitled to it, because there are more of them. Do you realize that it takes more men to take care of the sheep and shear them than it does to manufacture the wool into cloth? For example: in my factory I can use 300,000 pounds of wool a year in the grease, that is, exactly as it comes from the hands of the shearers. This represents the wool of 60,000 sheep. Now it is fair to say that one man cannot take care of and shear 1000 sheep, but allowing this to be one man, it would take 60 men to take care of these sheep, whose wool I use in one year. In making up this wool into dress goods I employ but 50 hands, and these do not all represent heads of families, as there are women and children among them. Thus it will be seen that whereas it required 60 men to raise the wool, it required but 50 hands to manufacture it, and of these not more than 20 are men. So, I say, the wool-growers are entitled to protection even more than the manufacturers. The effort to remove duty on wool is selfish and an injustice."
>
> "Regardless of the wool-growers, would you not welcome free wool?"
>
> "Not to save 5 cents a pound and pay 15 cents to save it, as the Mills bill provides. If we could have free wool and free dyes, and not injure any one else, we would of course be glad to have them, but as a matter of fact we could not, so we would have all protected alike, to the extent that not one dollar should go to England to pay for goods which can be manufactured here.
>
> "We manufacture brussels and wilton carpets, and it is not putting it too strongly to say that if the Mills bill becomes a law this factory will shut down. We cannot compete with the carpet mills of England in an open market. We want our own market, and would be content could we have it. Each year England sends to this country $12,000,000 worth of carpets. Could we have this trade for our own carpet mills, business would be good.
>
> "As an instance to show how little chance we would have to hold our own under free trade, it is stated that E. H. Barney, the skate manufacturer, who formerly employed 300 or 400 men at Springfield, has found it to his advantage to close his mill, import his skates in parts from Germany, keeping but a few men employed here in putting these parts together. With free trade even these would lose their employment."
>
> C. E. Fuller, of J. S. Holden & Co., manufacturers of woolen dress goods, declared emphatically for protection, and that alike for the wool-grower and the manufacturer.
>
> He tells a good story of campaign work done by him in Northern Vermont: "I met a Vermont farmer," said he, "who had been a Democrat all his life, and he stated that he should continue to vote the Democratic ticket because he believed in removing the duty on sugar. By a little arithmetic work we found that were this duty removed he would save $1.70 a year.
>
> "How much wool do you raise a year?" I asked.
>
> "About 2000 pounds," he said.
>
> "The Democratic party proposes to reduce the duty on wool 5 cents a pound. How many potatoes do you raise?"
>
> "About 1500 bushels."
>
> "They would reduce the value of your potatoes 15 cents a bushel. You consider that business?"
>
> "Is that so?" he exclaimed, "I shall have to look up that matter."
>
> "A few days since a young German called here who was a bookkeeper in his father's mill at home. When he saw our operatives go out at noon he exclaimed: 'What! they work in your mill? Why, they dress better than our help does on Sunday.' A dyer came into the office and said to the German that he received $3 a day. 'Three dollars a day; I wish I could get that,' said he, and remember he was a bookkeeper in his father's mill. He further stated that in Germany spinners received 45 to 60 cents a day, and that a girl would work three broad looms for 37½ cents a day. In our mill a girl works one loom and receives $1.50 to $1.75 a day."
>
> "How is the woolen business?"
>
> "If it was not for the help I would shut up the shop and go fishing the next three months. But for the sake of my help I shall keep going just as long as I can get a dollar in return for a dollar, but I do not know how long that will be. Profits are all out of the question."

The Three Rivers ball nine went to Springfield last Saturday to cross bats with the Homesteads of that place. There was an abundance of errors on both sides, which at critical points lost several runs for the Three Rivers team. This makes twice that the score has been tied, the other time being 2 to 2 in 5 innings, Memorial Day. Saturday they could not play the game to a finish on account of having to catch the train for home. No doubt another game will be arranged at no distant day. The score:

The Thorndikes played a close and exciting game of base ball at Spencer last Saturday, and a game they may well feel proud of, although they were not victorious. The game was theirs from the start, but in the last inning an error allowed the Spencers to score one run, which won the game. Shultz and Pero played a perfect game, only 4 safe hits being made off the latter, while Shultz supported him in fine style. The score at the close stood 5 to 4 in favor of Spencer.

The Thorndike ball club is much indebted to Agent Greene of the Thorndike Co., for the interest he has taken in them. Much is being said about the home team not playing more ball games at home, but the club has found by experience that from the number who have attended the games it is money in their pockets to play away from home, unless they are patronized more liberally in the future. The management has been corresponding with several clubs the past week, endeavoring to arrange a game on the home grounds, which they hope will be well patronized.

The 5th annual picnic of the Universalist society and Sunday-school was held Tuesday at Evergreen Park, State Line. The day was all that could be desired, and about 100 went down on the morning train. The number was further increased by those who came in teams and on the afternoon train, making in all a very pleasant party. The usual attractions of boating, swinging, croquet and dancing all received their due share of attention. The veteran quoit-pitchers were there in force, ready to vanquish any who might desire to contend with them. Aside from these attractions there was a ball game in the morning between the boys and men. On Wednesday, while working on the foundation of the East Congregational church, the workmen came upon some relics and records which were placed in the corner stone of the northwest corner of the foundation, when the church was built in the year 1826. It is probable they were placed there in some kind of a glass jar or bottle, as piecest of glass, a wooden stopper and a tin cover were with it. Water probably got into the jar, which when it frove broke the glass. It contained a silver dollar with the date of 1799, a silver dime dated 1821, and three coppers dated 1822. There was also a mass of paper which had become illegible by dampness, but seemed to have been a complete list of all who had contributed toward the building of the edifice, together with the amount which each gave. It is all carefully preserved, and will be placed in a sealed copper box and again laid in the corner stone, with articles of the present date.

The assessors have their work completed and the books are in the hands of the collector, F. W. Farrar. ## JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, July 25, 1888.

From this time till November 6 it is evident that the political pot will boil with increasing heat, and it is hoped that the decoction which will be brewed will be for the healing of the nation. If the campaign can be carried forward upon its present lines, it will be the most instructive to the nation we have had for a generation. It will require more thinking on the part of the people, and it looks as if it would require strict attention to arithmetic and to the laws of supply and demand on the part of the stump speakers. Last night the Republicans held their first great rally of the campaign, and there was only one subject discussed. Every man of them, Dr. Burden, Congressman Lodge, Lieut.-Gov. Brackett, Congressman Reed, Congressman Perkins, Treasurer Beard and Gov. Banks, confined his remarks to the tariff. A great crowd gathered, filling Tremont Temple and the Meionaon, and they knew, of course, that the tariff was the chief topic for discussion. This shows a great readiness on the part of the people to engage in this combat of reason, and in the long run there is no doubt that the best reason will triumph. From different parts of the country come reports of a shifting of sides by many men, and this, too, is inevitable and as it should be when an important principle, not hitherto made a basis of party division, is brought forward and made the issue of the campaign. It is to be hoped most earnestly that the campaign can be kept as free from personalities as it is at present, and that nothing may interfere to prevent an intelligent vote by the people upon this question.

About everything in the shape of campaign literature which has appeared at the headquarters here bears on this one point. The Republicans have not set their literary bureau at work yet, but they have in distribution a lot of protectionist documents furnished by the Home Market Club. As the issue is national and not state, they will rely upon the national committee for most of their documents, ordering them in such quantities as they think best for the edification of Massachusetts voters. Probably some of the speeches of last evening will also be printed in pamphlet form and given a wide distribution in this state.

It should be added concerning last night's meeting, before dropping the subject, that it was thoroughly successful. In numbers nothing more could have been desired or accommodated. Of enthusiasm there was an abundance and a surplus, and the momentum will give the party a good start in the campaign. Every speaker was on hand as expected, and the evening was not long for them all.

On the part of the Democrats nothing has been done yet, and they are not likely to begin their campaign for a month. They have no campaign literature of their own, with the exception of a few speeches by congressmen in favor of a revision of the tariff. But they are circulating a few documents which they obtained from the Massachusetts Tariff Reform League, such as they expect to show that Republican leaders in the past have been in favor of tariff revision, and their set of twenty questions for protectionists to answer regarding the condition of wages and prosperity here and in England in recent years. But documents are in process of preparation which will supply the present lack of campaign material, and long before November the intelligent voter will not be at a loss for reading matter on the tariff issue. The Democrats have taken no steps yet toward their first rally for the campaign. The young Democrats, who seem to have a more active organization than the old ones, will make a special effort to bring the young men of the state into line with them, but they will work with an ear open to the opinions of the general state committee. They have a committee now at work preparing an address to young men of the state, enlarging upon the doctrines of the Democratic party, not only tariff reform, but other features also, and they are discussing the advisability of getting out a Democratic primer for the benefit of those who want specific information regarding Democratic doctrines and purposes. So far as my observation and acquaintance goes, most of these young men are clean, able and wholesome, not of the class which has made politics a profession and a disgrace in Boston, and they say that they find much independence of the traditions of the fathers in the political opinions of the young men of the state.

In the gubernatorial campaign there is not much to add to what has already been published. Gov. Ames was moved to his residence in North Easton yesterday, and stood the journey remarkably. A special train was taken from the Providence station so that he might not be jolted over the car tracks and rough pavement to the Old Colony station, and they were only 35 minutes in going from one station to the other. The governor has gained vastly in the last three days, and it appears as if he had only to regain his lost strength to be his old self again. How far his political friends have been at work for him does not appear, for everything has been kept quiet. But it is not to be presumed for an instant that Col. Campbell would suffer him to lose by default. At any rate, the Draper influence is not losing that way, if the reports are true which are received here. Gen. Draper's brothers, George A. and Eben F., are said to be working for him in every part of the state, and they doubtless will have many votes to show for it in the convention.

In the vote of the Republican state committee yesterday to hold the state convention in Tremont Temple, Boston, September 12, regard was had for the convenience of Boston people who will not naturally return to the city by the first Wednesday of the month, the 5th. Some of the prominent Republicans will also be absent on the 5th at the Marietta College (O.) centennial celebration, and so it was thought best to make the date the 12th, though that is the date of the Prohibitionist convention in Worcester. A slight effort was made to hold the Republican convention in Worcester, but the movement was not strongly supported, and Boston was secured with little objection.

One of the matters of public interest here which will not be soon settled is the expulsion of Swinton's history from the public schools. Anti-Catholic meetings will be held every Sunday afternoon in Tremont Temple as long as there seems to be any need to hold them, and one of the speakers will be Father Chiniquy of Montreal, the independent Catholic priest. Many people are determined to resist to the last all Catholic encroachment on the public school question.

INHERITED DISEASES.

In the realm of disease the facts of inheritance are most numerous and are daily accumulating. Here, alas, they become terrible, fateful and overwhelming. No fact of nature is more pregnant with awful meaning than the fact of the inheritance of disease. It meets the physician on his daily rounds, paralyzing his art and filling him with dismay. The legend of the ancient Greeks picture the Furies as pursuing families from generation to generation, rendering them desolate. The Furies still apply their work of terror and death, but they are not now clothed in the garb of superstition, but appear in the more intelligible but no less awful form of hereditary disease.

Modern science, which has illuminated so many dark corners of nature, has shed a new light on the ominous word of the Scriptures, "The sins of the fathers shall be visited upon the children unto the third and fourth generation." Instances of hereditary disease abound. Fifty per cent of cases of consumption, that fearful destroyer of families, of cancer and scrofula, run in families through inheritance. Insanity is hereditary in a marked degree, but, fortunately, like many other hereditary diseases, tends to wear itself out, the stock becoming extinct. A distinguished scientist truly says: "No organ or texture of the body is exempt from the chance of being the subject of hereditary disease." Probably more chronic diseases, which permanently modify the structure and functions of the body, are more or less liable to be inherited. The important and far-reaching practical deductions from such facts—affecting so powerfully the happiness of individuals and families and the collective welfare of the nation—are obvious to reflecting minds, and the best means of preventing or curing these diseases is the subject of intense interest to all. Fortunately nature has provided a remedy, which experience has attested as infallible, and the remedy is the world's famous Swift's Specific, a pure vegetable compound — nature's antidote for all blood poisons. To the afflicted it is a blessing of inestimable value. An interesting treatise on "Blood and Skin Diseases," will be mailed free by addressing

That Tired Feeling

Is experienced by almost every one in warm weather, and many people resort to Hood's Sarsaparilla to drive away the languor and exhaustion. The blood, laden with impurities which have been accumulating for months, moves sluggishly through the veins, the mind fails to think quickly, and the body is still slower to respond. Hood's Sarsaparilla is just what is needed. It purifies, vitalizes, and enriches the blood, makes the head clear, creates an appetite, overcomes that tired feeling, tones the nervous system, and imparts new strength and vigor to the whole body.

"I was all run down and unfit for business. I was induced to take a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and it built me right up so that I was soon able to resume work. I recommend it to all who are afflicted." D. W. BRATE, stone-cutter, No. 4 Martin St., Albany, N. Y.

THE NEW EXCELSIOR.

The shades of night were falling fast
As through the city swiftly passed
A man who cried in ringing tones—
"If ye would ease your pains and moans
Take Pulque!"

"I was a wreck," the man proclaimed;
"A dismal wight—my system maimed
By patent nostrums, dearly bought,
Because they did avail me naught—
O Pulque!"

PULQUE is a Natural Product and is NOT a Patent Medicine.

It is the pure and simple juice of the Century Plant of Mexico, unadulterated and uncompounded. Our circular gives you the testimony of a score of physicians. Get one at your druggists.

In cases of Bright's disease, Kidney troubles, Dyspepsia, Insomnia, Debility, Dropsy, and wasting diseases, it will be found invaluable.

Retail Price, 50 cents per Quart Bottle.

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

ARE YOU CONSUMPTIVE?—Have you Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma, Indigestion? Use PARKER'S GINGER TONIC without delay. It has cured many of the worst cases and is the best remedy for all affections of the throat and lungs, and diseases arising from impure blood and exhaustion. The feeble and sick, struggling against disease, and slowly drifting to the grave, will in many cases recover their health by the timely use of Parker's Ginger Tonic, but delay is dangerous. Take it in time. It is invaluable for all pains and disorders of stomach and bowels. 50c at druggists.

SANFORD'S
GINGER!

There is something at once touching and beautiful in the contemplation of the universal confidence reposed in SANFORD'S GINGER. And justly so.

With what alacrity it responds to the cry of distress. No cramp or pain or cold or chill has ever made a demand upon it for relief or cure that has not met with instant and grateful response.

It is sure to check any disturbance of the bowels, instantly relieves cramps and pains, prevents indigestion, destroys disease germs in water drunk, restores the circulation when suspended by a chill, a frequent cause of cholera morbus, breaks up colds and fevers, and wards off malarial, contagious and epidemic influences.

Never travel without SANFORD'S GINGER.

Beware of worthless "gingers" offensively urged by mercenary dealers on those who call for

SANFORD'S GINGER.

Sold by all Druggists and Grocers.

The Old Wife.

By the bed the old man, waiting, sat in vigil sad and tender,
Where his aged wife lay dying, and the twilight shadows brown,
Slowly from the wall and window chased the sunset's golden splendor,
Going down.

"Is it night?" she whispered, waking (for her spirit seemed to hover Lost between the next world's sunrise and the bedtime cares of this),
And the old man, weak and tearful, trembling as he bent over her
Answered, "Yes."

"Are the children in?" she asked him. Could he tell her? All the treasures
Of their household lay in silence many years beneath the snow;
But her heart was with them living back among her toils and pleasures,
Long ago.

And again she called at dew-fall in the sunny summer weather,
"Where is little Charley, father? Frank and Robert—have they come?"
"They are safe," the old man faltered, "all the children are together, Safe at home."

Then he muttered gentle soothings, but his grief grew strong and stronger,
Till it choked and stilled him as he held her wrinkled hand,
For her soul, far out of hearing, could his fondest words no longer
Understand.

Still the pale lips stammered questions, lullabyes and broken verses,
Nursery prattle, all the language of a mother's loving heeds,
While the midnight round the mourner, left to sorrows bitter mercies,
Wrapped its weeds.

There was stillness on the pillow—and the old man listened lonely—
Till they led him from the chamber, with the burden on his breast,
For the wife of sixty years, his manhood's early love and only,
Lay at rest.

"Fare you well!" he sobbed, "my Sarah; you will meet the babies before me;
'Tis a little while, for neither can the parting long abide,
For you will come and call me soon, I know—and Heaven will restore me
To your side."

It was even so. The springtime, in steps of winter treading,
Scarcely shed its orchard blossoms ere the old man closed his eyes,
And they buried him by Sarah, and they had their "diamond wedding"
In the skies.

A BOARDING-HOUSE ROMANCE.

There were two ladies at the table with me—a mother and daughter—wealthy people, I supposed; and the girl was the most exquisitely pretty creature I had ever seen. She was so tall, so slim, so round, with such a fair, frank brow, such shining, brown eyes, almost startlingly dark, with her bright hair and fair complexion, such a sweet mouth, such dimples, my heart seemed to go out to her at once. And she was so charmed with everything, so full of bright clatter.

Her mother was a great contrast; she was a little, plaintive, aggrieved-looking person—one of those people who, I think, take a kind of pleasure in being unhappy.

And there was an odd-looking man—a very odd-looking man somehow—tall, and largely made, with a rugged, fair face, very wide open blue eyes, and a fine head held very high. Somehow he was not like the usual run of our visitors, and, strangest of all, he brought in a dog with him—a handsome pug, if any pug can be called handsome—who preceded his master up to the room, his wrinkled nose sniffing the air and his crocked eyes looking in every corner.

I looked at my pretty girl. Her face was all dimpled and flushed.

"The dear old doggie. Do let me hold him for a little while; I am so fond of dogs."

Her mother moved uneasily and protested feebly—

"Alice dear."

The stranger turned and looked at her.

"Thank you so much," he said. "Do you really like dogs? Most ladies are afraid of Jack."

* * * * * * *

"Some day, some day, some day we shall meet," Miss Verinder sang. I remember just how she looked; I could not wonder at the passionate admiration in the young men's eyes. Old woman as I was, I found her a pleasant sight.

"A sweet voice and a sweet face," said some one beside me. It was our neighbor at dinner. He had come softly across the room, holding his dog's leash. He stood a moment by me, and then he sat down behind the piano, took his dog in his lap, and threw back his great head, listening with evident enjoyment to the music. I thought again what a strange-looking man he was. Miss Verinder finished her song, and turned around with all the pretty light on her face. He crossed over then and thanked her, while the young men looked rather superciliously at him.

"I felt sure you had a singing face," he said. "Are you well off for music here?"

"Not very," she told him, and then she asked him if he played,

"Yes," he said. "It is almost the only solace I have." He paused a moment, and then went on in such a low, hopeless kind of voice. "I am almost blind."

"Oh, I am sorry."

Poor man! I thought it ought to be a kind of compensation to see the sweet tenderness of the bright young face, to hear the soft pity of her voice. He said something—I did not catch what it was—and then sat down to the piano.

Play! I should think he did play. Never had there been such music brought out of piano. A great hush fell upon the room. Even those who did not care for music for its own sake, were silent from astonishment.

As for Mr. Gorst himself, the music seemed to transform him. He shook back his hair, and his grave, plain face brightened up.

"Jack," sitting at his feet, kept his eyes steadily fixed upon him, as if he understood it all; and for Miss Verinder, the pretty color grew brighter in her cheeks, and her eyes shone. She was passionately fond of music.

"Odd man! Don't you think so, very?" whispered Mrs. Colquhoun—the greatest gossip in the whole house—to me. "Not a gentleman, decidedly; actor, I should think; professional, certainly. Dreadful flirt that girl is, to be sure. Do you admire her? No, surely not."

I held up my hand to silence her. I did not like Mrs. Colquhoun. I knew her mischief-making tongue of old, and I had caught a flash from Alice Verinder's soft eyes.

Mr. Gorst was going to sing for us. As he played the first bars of "The Message," Jack gave a kind of straightened howl.

"He is wonderfully fond of singing," his master explained with pride.

Clearly, I thought, he was a thorough old bachelor, and his dog was his wife and child to him.

Well, I have heard many fine voices, but never one, I think, like Mr. Gorst's. As the passionate, beautiful words of "The Message" rang out, I felt my very heart stirred within me.

A great hush fell upon the room as he finished. One could well believe such a voice would "pass through the golden gate." I saw a strange moved expression on Mr. Hardynge's face, the quiet old bachelor I have mentioned before; and as for Miss Verinder, I did not like to look at her; I knew there were tears in the bright young eyes.

And after "The Message," he gave us "For Ever and For Ever," and "The Distant Shore." He would have sung all night, I think, if the loud clang of the supper bell had not sounded out, bringing us all back to the world around us.

He dropped his hands from the keys quite startled.

"Oh! it's only the tea bell. Are we expected to eat again? But I have inflicted myself upon you."

"I could listen forever," said the girl, with that soft, lovely light still on her face.

I am a foolish old woman, I know; but I caught myself hoping he was not too blind to see it.

"Miss Verinder, will you not let me get you some tea?" broke in the Cambridge man, Mr. Hoare, as I found out his name was. He had been watching the changes in the girl's face all through the singing.

Well, he was old enough to be her father, and he was almost blind, and was grave and old looking beside, while she was the sweetest, freshest bit of womanhood. Young even for her twenty years. And yet somehow those two, Mr. Gorst and Alice Verinder, were drawn to each other from that very first night, I think. Perhaps it was Jack, perhaps it was the music, or that of the child's sweet, womanly heart was moved to pity the lonely, afflicted man. She was so watchful of him at meal times, would try in her pretty way to interest him, to drive the shadows from his face; would pay him such sweet deference. He was always quiet, always silent and reserved. It did not seem to me that he took much notice of what would have raised a young man to the seventh heaven of happiness. I came on them one morning out among the flowers—he walking up and down slowly and carefully, as an almost blind man does, she springing out in her joyous way, grow all ruffled with embroidery, a wide hat shading her sweet face, the sunlight on the mass of crisp hair beneath. They said "Good morning" to each other, and then she spoke to the dog.

Between the two admirers, Miss Verinder ought to have acquired much useful information during that sweet summer holiday. Young Horace took possession of her at once. I heard her blithe laugh as she answered some remark of his. They made a handsome couple, I thought; she so fair and slim, he so tall and dark and broad shouldered, and both with that wonderful light of youth on their faces.

"He is a handsome fellow," Mr. Gorst said, and I knew he had divined my thought; he was so wonderfully sharp, for all of his blindness.

I scarcely knew how long I had been writing. It was a letter to a dear old friend of mine, and I had for a little while forgotten my surroundings, when Mrs. Colquhoun's wearisome voice forced itself on my attention.

She had exhausted her newspaper, and Mrs. Verinder having just come in, she had a thrilling piece of gossip to unfold to her.

"Quite shocking, Mrs. Verinder! I was so frightened I could not sleep again. Mr. Gorst, you know, he came down the corridor last night, perfectly drunk, stumbling over everything. He tried to burst into my room, but fortunately I always keep the door locked; and he felt about his room and talked to himself half the night. Quite shocking, is it not? These professional sort of people are always unsteady, and being blind seems to make it so much the worse. Really, Mrs. Verinder, don't you know we ladies ought to take some steps to show what we think of such conduct?"

Mrs. Verinder made some feeble sound of horror. I was too petrified to say anything.

If this was a story, it was rather a worse one than usual; if it was true———

But what was this indignant young figure that started up from my side?

"It is not true, mother—I am sure it is not true. Oh, it is a shame to tell such stories of anyone! Mr. Gorst is a gentleman; he would scorn to do such things. Oh, it is cruel! People ought to spare him at least."

The child looked transformed, her cheeks blazing, her brown eyes sparkling.

"Alice, Alice!" said her mother.

"It is the unjustice of it, mother—that is what I mind."

Mrs. Colquhoun was straightening her spectacles and looking up at the indignant girl with a malicious smile.

I knew what a story she would make of this, and, though I could not but admire Alice's generous championship, I felt sorry she should have drawn this woman's unscrupulous tongue upon her.

She was still standing there, with her tall young figure drawn up, and her scornful face, and Mrs. Colquhoun had just opened her lips for a crushing report, when behold standing amongst us Mr. Gorst himself, perfectly calm and immovable to all outward appearance.

Had a thunderbolt fallen amongst us, we could not have looked more astonished. Mrs. Colquhoun's face flushed crimson, as well it might. Poor, pretty Alice grew snow white, and all the fire went out of her eyes.

"I can not thank you sufficiently, Miss Verinder," he said, "for taking the trouble to defend me. Pray let me apologize," he went on then to Mrs. Colquhoun, "for having unintentionally heard so much about myself. I was writing letters in the other bay, and had no intention of listening, when my own name caught my ear. It is a fulfilment of the old proverb; but I have no doubt you will be greatly pleased to hear you have made a most unfortunate mistake. My room was changed last night; the gas was not lit; my luggage was all about in the middle of the floor. In my half or three-quarters blind condition, I certainly did stumble a good deal about, and had also to speak a good deal to my dog during the night; he is always restless in strange quarters. As for being drunk, I have been a water drinker all my life. I must express my regret for having so disturbed your rest, but I am sure your distress of mind last night must be more than compensated this morning by your relief of finding out I am not such a depraved character as you had feared."

* * * * * * * *

It was a very narrow path, just room for two people to walk very close together, consequently, I suppose, it was called the "Lover's Walk." There were seats at intervals, and it had many unexpected turns and twists, as it wound round the hill.

Coming suddenly round one of these sharp corners, what or rather who did I see just in front of me only a few yards away! Alice Verinder and Mr. Gorst; and he was holding both her hands in his, and bending over her, the inevitable "Jack" sitting beside them, his lolling tongue hanging out, his leash lying unregarded on the damp ground, an expression on his face as if he would say "this is a nice piece of business." Well, I take great credit to myself. I neither started nor screamed; luckily neither of them had seen me, and I turned swiftly the way I had come, hurried round the corner, almost ran the whole way home, never stopping for breath until I found myself safe in my own room to think over what I had seen.

It was an hour or two later, and I was still sitting in my room, but dressed ready for dinner, waiting for the bell to ring, when there was a little tap at my door and Alice entered radiant, blushing, happy. I remember just how she looked, in a pretty dress of some pale shining green stuff, she always dressed so pretty, with a square cut bodice and elbow sleeves showing her fair, round arms, a bunch of white roses in the lace at her bosom. She stood looking at me for a moment, and then closed the door and crossed the room swiftly, and came and knelt beside me.

"I saw you today," she said softly, "and you turned back because you saw—us."

How can I describe the sweet, radiant light in her face? I bent down and kissed her.

"My dear," I said to her, "are you sure of yourself? Do you really love him?" But there was no need of an answer. I could read it in her eyes.

"Oh! Miss Brown, I am so happy, so happy. Do you think" she said then with a little wistful trouble in her sweet face, "that I will be able to make him happy, that I can help to make up to him for all his troubles?"

"My dear" I told her, stroking her bright hair, and feeling tears not far from my foolish old eyes, "you will make him the happiest man in England."

"And only think he was going away, and would never, never have told me, if it was not for today, and that horrid woman. Oh! Miss Brown, I am a happy, happy girl."

SO FRIGHTENED.—A woman weighing about 215 pounds plunged wildly around in a frightfully dangerous manner on a crowded street the other day. She was evidently looking for some one, for she breathlessly gasped out:

"Charles! Oh, Charles! Where has he gone? Oh, Charles!"

Charles had been carried forward by the crowd, and when he stopped a lamp-post had hidden him from view. When the big woman saw him she plunged forward, fell heavily on his thirteen-inch chest, crushing him against the lamp-post and sobbed out:

"Oh—Charley—my—own—dear—husband! I lost sight of you and I was so frightened at finding myself alone in this crowd! You mustn't let yourself be carried away from your little girly again! You know how timid I am! I'm so easily frightened—foolish child that I am.

Maiden Aunt (visiting family for the summer)—"Gussie you shouldn't cry so when it thunders. The thunder can't hurt you. Don't you see it dosen't scare me any?" Six-year-old (sobbing)—"It won't—scare me either auntie, when—I've heard it—th—thunder as many summers as you have."—Chicago Tribune.

"Have you kept track of young Baboony lately? At the rate he's going on he'll soon be seriously embarrassed." "Embarrassed? Nonsense! You don't know the man. He asked me for the loan of a hundred this morning without the quiver of an eyelid." —Life.

Thou Art Not Near.

Thou art not near me, but I see thine eyes
Shine through the gloom like stars in winter skies,
Pointing the way my longing steps would go,
To come to thee because I love thee so.

Thou art not near me, but I feel thine arm
Soft folded round me, shielding me from harm,
Guiding me on as in the days of old,
When life was dark and all the ways were cold.

Thou art not near me, but I hear thee speak
Sweet as the breath of June upon my cheek,
And as thou speakest, I forget my fears,
And all the darkness of the lonely years.

O love, my love, whate'er my fate may be,
Closer to thy side, or nevermore with thee,
Absent or present, near or far apart,
Thou hast my love and fillest all my heart.

—F. E. Weatherly.

HINTS FOR YOUNG HOUSEWIVES.

Glycerine does not agree with a very dry skin.

If you use powder always wash it off before going to bed.

When you give your cellar its spring cleaning, add a little copperas water and salt to the whitewash.

A little ammonia and borax in the water when washing blankets keeps them soft and prevents shrinkage.

Sprinkling salt on the top and at the bottom of garden walls is said to keep snails from climbing up or down.

For relief from heartburn or dyspepsia drink a little cold water in which has been dissolved a teaspoonful of salt.

For hoarseness, beat a fresh egg, and thicken it with white sugar. Eat of it freely and the hoarsness will soon be relieved.

If quilts are folded or rolled tightly after washing, then beaten with a rolling pin or potato masher, it lightens up the cotton and makes them seem fresh and new.

Chemists say that it takes more than twice as much sugar to sweeten preserves, sauce, etc., if put in when they begin to cook, as it does to sweeten after the fruit is cooked.

Tar may be removed from the hands by rubbing with the outside of fresh orange or lemon peel and drying immediately. The volatile oils dissolve the tar so that it can be rubbed off.

Moths or any summer flying insects may be enticed to destruction by a bright tin pan half filled with kerorene set in a dark corner of a room. Attracted by the bright pan, the moth will meet his death in the kerosene.

It may be worth knowing that water in which three or four onions have been boiled, applied with a gilding brush to the frames of pictures and chimney glasses, will prevent flies lighting on them and will not injure the frames.

A long-handled brush, long enough to reach the ceilings, is as important to good housekeeping as a broom; if the walls and ceilings are lightly brushed before the room is swept, the paper will keep clean and fresh much longer.

Ingrain carpets, worn beyond repair, should be cut into lengthwise stips, and woven the same as a rag carpet. It is unnecessary to sew the ingrain cuttings, weavers generally prefering to overlap the strips as they weave. Mats and carpets assume quite a Persian look when made in this way, and are very durable.

CONTENTS OF A WOMAN'S HANDBAG.

What do you carry in that bag?" said the big man to the business woman, pointing to the little black handbag that is her inseparable companion.

"I'll show you," said she, and then she took out two handkerchiefs, one for use and one for show, a lead pencil with the point broken, a stick of gum unchewed, a lump of gum, chewed, George William Curtis's editorial on Matthew Arnold's death, cut out of Harper's Weekly, three keys that don't fit anything in particular, one latch key that does fit, a Bond street library card, three Daly's theatre seat coupons, a tiny box of face powder, three capsules of quinine, five visiting cards, seven letters, five of them from one man, sprang suits cut out of Sunday paper, a season ticket to the American Art association's prize exhibition. An unposted lettler to her mother, three rubber bands, three postal cards, a shoe buttoner, dentist's appoinment card, four hairpins, an unpolished moss agate, coral brooch with the pin broken oft, half a mustard leaf, a piece of paper with quotations from Mme Blavatsky on theosophy written on it a sample of yellow ribbon to be matched, a card photograph of another girl and a purse containing one three-cent piece and a postage stamp.—New York Graphic.

IT WAS AWFUL.—"'A baby in the house is a well spring of joy' and our own dear little Horace is the light and joy of our lives," wrote Mr. Pimpkins in a letter to a friend the other day, and then he got up and walked over to the cradle in which his own little well spring of joy had been yelling steadily for an hour, and said:

"Are you going to howl forever? You beat anything for yelling and screeching that I ever saw in all the days of my life! I believe in my soul that you are two-thirds hyena. It's enough to drive a fellow crazy to be shut up an hour with you! I wouldn't have another such a joyous thing as you are around for a billion dollars. I wish your mother would hurry home and let me get away to my club or to some other place where I can have a little peace of my life! This is awful, awful!"

Minister's wife (with an eye to business)—"Is Mr. Smith, whose marriage ceremony you are to perform, a liberal man, dear?' Minister—"He has the reputation of being very liberal." "Oh, William, perhaps he may give you a very generous fee!" "Rather doubtful, I think. He has been married before."—Texas Siftings.

LAWN TENNIS.

THE COURT.

1. The court should be laid out in the front yard. This gives better opportunity for the display of costumes, and is more likely to inspire envy in the people across the way.

THE BALLS.

2. The balls should not weigh more than one pound each and should not be of the codfish variety.

3. They should be covered with some soft substance to prevent their making dents in the players' heads.

4. In case the ball is driven over the fence and into a field occupied by a savage bull, the gentleman with the red blazer is the person to recover the ball.

5. In case a ball is driven through a neighbor's window, it is not necessary to send for it. The neighbor usually comes out in person. In such cases it is proper to suspend the game and permit the ladies to withdraw. If the neighbor is not a profane person, the ladies may be permitted to remain and stand their share of the bill.

THE RACKET.

6. The racket should not be of the kind that some young men go on.

7. A loaded handle is recommended to experts. It will be found convenient in case of a dispute about the score.

8. Every young man going out of town for over Sunday should carry a racket. It lends an air of distinction which impresses people in the city. It the young man does not play tennis, the racket may be left at the station and called for on the way back, Monday morning.

COSTUMES.

9. Almost any thing outlandish will do, particularly if it is striped.

10. Young men of meager development of the lower limbs must wear knee breeches. This rule is imperative.

11. Ordinarily, ladies playing tennis do not wear trains.

12. Under the Boston rule, ladies are permitted to retain their eyeglasses.

13. Tennis costumes should not be worn to church. They have a tendency to rattle the preacher.

14. The old rule about those also serve who only stand and wait is now absolete.

15. After July 21, 1888, and until the beginning of the regular chestnut season, all plays and puns on the words "deuce," "love" and "advantage" will be strictly barred.

16. The butler is not expected to serve at tennis. This duty is usually performed by the young ladies of the house.—Life.

A NEW WRINKLE IN TROWSERS.

"Oh!"

"What's the matter?"

"There's a horrid bug on your trousers. Brush it off, Jack."

A pretty girl and a particularly well-dressed youth were walking on Walnut street yesterday afternoon toward five o'clock. The pretty girl's face filled with horror at the sight of a long and brightly-colored caterpillar which extended itself lengthwise on her companion's pantaloons above the knee. She struck at it deftly with her parasol, but the insect clung to the cloth, which was a fine quality of black cassimere. A second poke with the parasol failed to dislodge it. Finally she stooped and tried to pick it off, but it refused to move.

"Better leave him alone, sis," laughed the young man, and upon her asking what it was, explained as follows:

"It's a new wrinkle. You order a jet black pair of trousers with a shine on the cloth. Then, after your tailor has cut the pieces, have a spot marked on the piece over the left knee and get some one to embroider there a bug or butterfly or some such insect. It's only been out a week, and nobody has it outside of Philadelphia. Great idea, eh, sis?

"Who embroidered that?"

"Fannie; great scheme."

His sister curled her lips. "I don't like it," said she. Philadelphia News.

TOM OCHILTREE'S STORY.—Col. Thomas Ochiltree, with a suspiciously red handkerchief in his hands, which he vigorously protests is not a "bandana," tells this story:—

When Thurman was in the senate, one of his fellow-members was Henry G. Davis, of West Virginia, the father-in-law of S. B. Elkins. An important debate came on in which Thurman took a leading part. In the midst of it Davis went to sleep with his head on his arm on his desk.

Thurman stopped to blow his nose, and it is one of his personal peculiarities that on such an occasion he literally wakes the dead. On this occasion he woke Davis, who, in early life, was a Baltimore & Ohio brakeman, and who, as he opened his eyes, caught sight of Thurman's red bandana waving in the air. In his half-dazed condition he coupled the sound and the bandana into a railroad signal, and grabbing his desk he attempted to twist it around like an old-fashioned brake before he remembered where he was and began to laugh at his delusion.—New York Mail and Express.

KEEPING OLD LETTERS.—Trouble, not good, arises from old letters. What unthought of secrets they disclose—family troubles of which the world never dreamed; bitter heartaches where we thought all was serene; love lettlers, sacred for their time and place, ridiculous now; a whispered suspicion of slander upon a name we thought was pure as snow, and we are left to wonder whether it is true or false. It is the sarcasms instead of the joys that most letters contain. They are the safety-value for deep feeling from friend to friend, good in their time, but sometimes more than useless in the future. Every day brings new experiences. We are constantly changing, and in many cases would be ashamed of our own letters written 10 years ago.—Housekeeper.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, AUGUST 3, 1888.

Chief Justice Fuller probably will not take the oath of office until October.

The liquor political clubs in New York know a friend when they see one, and they propose to raise $250,000 for use in helping to reëlect Gov. Hill.

Reports from Gen. Sheridan are taking on a very favorable tone, and there really seems to be an encouraging prospect that the general will get around again.

Gov. Ames is now at his country home in North Easton, and is improving so rapidly that he confidently expects to be able to resume his accustomed duties soon.

"Let well enough alone," is the banner under which Gov. Ames hopes to sail into the executive chair for another term. He has become so enamored with the state house during the six years of his official residence there that he dreadfully dislikes to give it up.

It is reported that the Adams Express Co. proposes to classify its horses according to color, and will send all the white ones to Philadelphia. This leads to remarks all over the country regarding the prevailing color of hair worn by damsels in the city of brotherly love.

Levi P. Morton, the Republican nominee for vice president, has promised to attend the fair of the New England Agricultural Society this fall, bringing his famous herd of Guernsey cattle. The managers invited Gen. Harrison to be present, but he could not come.

Even the opponents of Gen. Harrison are compelled to admit that his speeches are models in their way, and in the numerous addresses he has made since his nomination they have found nothing to criticise. Says the Boston Herald:—

> Gen. Harrison's speeches at the West strikes us in good taste, and the spirit by which they are characterized is indicative of good judgment on his part. He does not neglect to show to his hearers that he is in full sympathy with his party, and yet at the same time he enunciates the party positions in a moderate and dignified manner, becoming his position as the candidate for president of one of the greatest nations of the earth.

President Cleveland has been on a fishing trip the past week, and while Mrs. Cleveland was attending church in the quiet town of Marion last Sunday her liege lord was scudding along merrily over the waters of the Sound, on recreation bent. It would have been a better example, and in much better taste, if the head of the nation had paid some regard to the proprieties of the day himself. Boys who want to go fishing Sundays will now have a shining example for their encouragement.

Speaking of the already crowded condition of the new jail in Springfield, the Homestead delivers this little pointed sermon:—

> Nobody will deny that nine out of every ten of its inmates are sent there directly or indirectly by rum. Nobody who knows the facts will deny that drunkenness is greatly increased wherever licenses prevails; the police court statistics demonstrate this overwhelmingly in Springfield this year as they have in many years before. Therefore so long as Springfield, Holyoke, Chicopee, Westfield, and the other large towns of the county vote for license—that is, for free rum—crime will increase, the jail will be crowded and the cost of dealing with the criminal classes will be greatly enhanched. A more wasteful policy—to say nothing of public morals and the making of a fresh crop of drunkards for the coming generation—could hardly be devised. The saloon must go, or order, peace, sobriety, the home and all that makes our New England life worth living, must go.

Mr. Blaine is now on the billowy deep, and his arrival home next week will be the signal for one of the biggest displays of hero worship the country has seen in many a day. The Democrats would have been greatly relieved if Mr. Blaine had remained across the water until the presidential election was well over, for he has had his eyes wide open while abroad, and will come home loaded to the muzzle with facts and arguments showing the vastly superior condition of workingmen under the American system of protection, over those of every foreign country. Mr. Blaine is a public speaker of remarkable power, and it is expected that he will put in a good deal of telling work on the stump during the campaign.

In a speech to a visiting delegation last Saturday Gen. Harrison spoke of the surplus, saying:—

> We believe that the development of home manufactures tends directly to promote the interest of agriculture by furnishing a home market for the products of the farm, and thus emancipating our farmers from the transportation charges which they must pay when their products seek distant markets. We are confronted with a treasury surplus. Our position is exceptional. We are not seeking, as many other nations are, new subjects of taxation, new sources of revenue. Our quest is now, how wisely to reduce our national revenue. The attempt has been made to use this surplus as a lever to overturn the protective system. The promoters of this scheme, while professing a desire to diminish the surplus, have acted as if their purpose was to increase it in part by opposing necessary and legitimate appropriations. I agree that there is danger that surplus may promote extravagance, but I do not find myself in sympathy with that policy that denies the appropriation necessary for the proper defence of our people and for the convenient administration of our public affairs throughout the country in order that the threat of a surplus may be used for a sinister purpose. I believe that, in reducing our revenue to the level of our needful and proper expenditures, we can and should continue and protect our own industries. I do not like to intrust this work to those who declare protective duties to be vicious "legalized robbery." The Republican party has by its legislation shown its capacity wisely to reduce our revenues, and at the same time to preserve the American system. It can be trusted to do the work that remains, and to do it wisely.

Very many of the operatives in our New England woolen mills are foreign-born, and have hitherto been fathful Democrats, but current reports represent them as drifting over by hundreds to the other party.

A man was taken out of a well at Johnston, Neb., alive last Saturday, after being imprisoned ten days by the caving in of the earth over him. He was sustained by food passed through an opening.

Malden will appropriately celebrate, next Thursday, the 100th anniversary of the birth, in that place, of Adoniram Judson, the pioneer American missionary.

Gen. C. B. Fisk, the Prohibition candidate for president, made his fortune in the fish an oyster trade, and is known among the boys as "Clam-bake Fisk."

The steamer Parthian, from Philadelphia for Boston, was run into by a schooner in Vineyard Sound on Saturday night. But slight damage was done.

The "bang" is going out of fashion in London, and high intellectual foreheads are again the mode.

The Palmer Electric Company contemplates extending its line to Monson before long to light some of the stores and business places there. There is a possibility that some of the factories in this and other villages of the town will put in the incandescent system, as it is considered the cheaper and by far the better light in the end.

The funeral of Mrs. Angeline Parker, who died Monday afternoon at the residence of R. S. Hastings in the northern part of the town, was held Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, the interment being at Putnam Heights, Ct., a former home of the deceased. Her death was caused by consumption of the blood, after an illness of about fifteen weeks. She was 66 years of age and one of a family of nine children, five of whom survive her. The funeral of Amos Mason was held yesterday at the residence of Miss Mary Mason, Rev. H. W. Pope, officiating. Perhaps no case of sickness has excited more sympathy of late, the lad having been confined to his bed for six months with a wasting disease. He was a bright boy who made many friends, and was connected with the Christian Endeavor society, whose members have been very faithful to him during his trying illness, and on his birthday a company went with musical instruments and songs to gladden his heart. He further states that the affair was unintentional, and that he had no malice in committing the deed. He denies the charge of ever having threatened the life of his victim. The case was continued until next Friday, and in default of $1000 bonds the prisoner was committed to the county jail to await his trial. Another warrant will be issued charging the assailant with manslaughter.

A. should congratulate themselves upon securing his services."

It seems that Ware has a good many superstitious people, for since it was reported that a ghost had made its appearance near the Wetherell place on Elm street crowds have been by there every night expecting to see it. It was estimated that one night between 500 and 1000 persons visited the ground. It seems that some one has been playing tricks and laughing to himself to see the fun, but he had better not go far enough to get caught, for then his fun would stop and the authorities would do the laughing.

Miss Eddy brought home with her several fine paintings of Block Island scenery, which she will be pleased to show to any who may call.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, Aug. 1, 1888.

An esteemed member of the Republican state committee, speaking to-day of the governor's contributions to the campaign expenses, said that he had given something to help pay the expenses of the recent Republican rally in Tremont Temple, and from another source it is learned that he has made other contributions to the party treasury. Doubtless that is what the Boston Globe means by saying that Gov. Ames had inserted a faucet in his barrel. But the Globe always had that lively way of putting things. When John E. Russell is nominated for governor by the Democrats, which they seem disposed to do in the face of his assertions that he will not take the place, it is not to be supposed that the Globe will inform the public that he has put a faucet in his barrel, even if he should give the state committee the whole of that $10,000 which he is credited with saying he had laying idle and could put to no better use than in using it for campaign expenses. The committeeman above mentioned, referring to the state of the Republican treasury at the close of the last campaign, said that it would have been much better for Ames politically and would have saved hard feelings, if he had quietly drawn his check for the deficit, which goes to confirm the belief that it is the money question which has been a leading factor in the opposition to giving the governor a third term.

Reports from the governor to-day are to the effect that he is gaining rapidly in strength, has suffered no drawback and is likely to be out for business in a fortnight. Col. Campbell seems to have taken pains that his political interests should not suffer, and reports that his gain in strength has been followed by a decided improvement in his prospects of getting the nomination. Men who were doubtful in regard to his ability to run, now that they see that he is gaining, have declared themselves on his side. This is true of some who have been said to be for Draper.

Meanwhile the Draper movement seems to be making headway. I hear of it in different parts of the state, particularly in the manufacturing villages where the Drapers would be most likely to be acquainted. In Lowell there is reported to be a decided Draper following. In the western part of the state the Draper agents are said to be active. I heard to-day of their presence in Salem, and they have some very shrewd and active men among their number. On the Cape, the governor is said to be stronger than had been expected, and from Essex county to-day comes a report that he is pretty sure of getting the delegates there. Draper is reported to have strength in Worcester county. Personal agents and the mails are both used freely in this work, but it is to be hoped that it will not be carried to the extent it was before the convention of 1882, which nominated Robert R. Bishop.

Locally we have a subject here which is about as absorbing as politics, and that is the Catholic question. It would not be strange if the Legislature were called upon to face the issue again this coming winter. Last year, it will be remembered, there was a great agitation of the parochial school question. The joint special investigating committee of the Legislature of 1887 reported that the parochial schools should be brought under the supervision of the public authorities, but such a determined push against it was made by the Catholics and by those who did not believe that anything could be accomplished in that way, that all legislation was defeated. Practically, it was a triumph for the Catholic party. After the Legislature adjourned came the move of Boston Catholics against Swinton's history, for its teachings in reference to the sale of indulgences by the Catholic church, which again resulted in triumph for the Catholics, for the book was ordered out of the schools and the master who gave the instruction was transferred. This has been too much for the Protestant people to bear submissively, and several public meetings have already been held, while more are to follow. Last Sunday three eloquent preachers warned the people against the danger of Catholic aggressions,—Rev. Dr. Miner in Tremont Temple, Rev. Dr. Hamilton in East Boston and Rev. Dr. Daniel Dorchester in Roslindale. Most significant was the popular approval which greeted their strong words against any submission to a policy which is hostile to our public school system. If this agitation continues, it is very probable that it will go to the state house again. The old saying promises to hold true in this case, that questions will not stay settled until they are settled right.

Yet what the remedy must be will be a difficult matter for our legislators to decide. It looks as if there was an irrepressible conflict which can never be ended by toleration or compromise, but only by the unconditional submission of the weaker side. Father Conaty of Worcester preached a sermon here the other day at the laying of the corner stone of the Leo XIII parochial school, which was almost exclusively a defense of the right of Catholic parents to educate their children as they choose, apart from the authority of the state. Now that position is fundamentally opposed to the doctrine upon which our common school system is founded, and the bold assertion of it at such a time is nothing less than a challenge to the Protestants. I do not see how there can be any compromise. Both doctrines cannot be true, and it will be for the Legislature, or for the people through the Legislature, to say how much longer the inevitable conflict shall be postponed.

The next time any of your people are in Boston, if they are in the vicinity of the state house, they should see the new building of Houghton & Dutton on the corner of Tremont and School streets. It is of granite and iron and it is to be remarkably light, so there will be an excellent opportunity for the display of goods. It towers now far above all surrounding buildings and as yet there are no signs that it will stop. Three straight granite columns form the solid work on the side next to each street. The rounded corner is of iron pillars set one above another. The interior frame-work is of iron and the floors have a basis of fire-proof hollow tiling. The immense structure shows the tendency of modern city building to go high into the air, and the wonder is what will come next.

The Democratic state convention will probably be held the first week in September, and their opening rally of the national campaign is likely to occur the last week of August.

The Republicans have talked some of changing the date of their state convention, so that it shall not occur on the same day as the Prohibitionists', but it is not likely that there will be any change.

They are very busy in all political headquarters, and great piles of documents are being distributed.

SLAUGHTER!

Is a very mild expression for the sacrifice in prices which S. H. Hellyar & Co. have just inaugurated. We find ourselves with $10,000 worth of goods more than we need, and more than we ought to have at this season of the year, and have accordingly made prices on some that cannot help but move it quickly. Our $18 and $15 Suits will be sold for $10. Our $12 and $10 Suits reduced to $7.50. A large line of $5 Pants reduced to $3.50. We have the best $2 Pant ever sold for that money. Men's Working Pants reduced to 75 cents. Our Boys' Suit department shows the greatest sacrifice in prices of any department in our store. $8 Suits reduced to $3. $5 Suits now $2. Sailor Suits, brown and blue, 62 cents. Boys' Short Pants from 25 cents upward. These are a sample of the low prices which we are now offering, and it will behoove all who desire to make a dollar without any exertion on their part to visit this great sale of Men's and Boys' Clothing.

The Great Secret

Of exceptionally long and abundant hair may never be solved; but that Ayer's Hair Vigor preserves the hair in all its beauty and luxuriance, and even restores it, when thin and gray, is

WELL KNOWN.

P. J. Cullen, Saratoga Springs, N. Y., writes: "My father, at the age of fifty, lost all the hair on the top of his head. After one month's trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor, the hair began coming, and, in three months, he had a fine growth of hair of the natural color."

J. T. Gibson, 96 Hope-st., Huntley, Staffordshire, Eng., writes "I have seen young men in South Australia quite gray, whose hair has been restored to its natural color after using but one bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor."

INHERITED DISEASES.

In the realm of disease the facts of inheritance are most numerous and are daily accumulating. Here, alas, they become terrible, fateful and overwhelming. No fact of nature is more pregnant with awful meaning than the fact of the inheritance of disease. It meets the physician on his daily rounds, paralyzing his art and filling him with dismay. The legend of the ancient Greeks picture the Furies as pursuing families from generation to generation, rendering them desolate. The Furies still apply their work of terror and death, but they are not now clothed in the garb of superstition, but appear in the more intelligible but no less awful form of hereditary disease.

Modern science, which has illuminated so many dark corners of nature, has shed a new light on the ominous word of the Scriptures, "The sins of the fathers shall be visited upon the children unto the third and fourth generation." Instances of hereditary disease abound. Fifty per cent of cases of consumption, that fearful destroyer of families, of cancer and scrofula, run in families through inhertance. Insanity is hereditary in a marked degree, but, fortunately, like many other hereditary diseases, tends to wear itself out, the stock becoming extinct. A distinguished scientist truly says: "No organ or texture of the body is exempt from the chance of being the subject of hereditary disease." Probably more chronic diseases, which permanently modify the structure and functions of the body, are more or less liable to be inherited. The important and far-reaching practical deductions from such facts—affecting so powerfully the happiness of individuals and families and the collective welfare of the nation—are obvious to reflecting minds, and the best means of preventing or curing these diseases is the subject of intense interest to all. Fortunately nature has provided a remedy, which experience has attested as infallible, and the remedy is the world's famous Swift's Specific, a pure vegetable compound — nature's antidote for all blood poisons. To the afflicted it is a blessing of inestimable value. An interesting treatise on "Blood and Skin Diseases," will be mailed free by addressing

On the Stairs.

We were sitting, after supper,
Tete-a-tete upon the stair,
With the gleam of waxen tapers
Falling gold upon her hair,
And his roguish eyes were downcast,
While upon his sunburnt cheek
The dash of red grew deeper,
Ca se voit, I had to speak.

The brown, strong fingers trembled
As I held them fast in mine;
A shy, sweet glance made glad my heart
Like draughts of Gascon wine.
I kissed his unresisting lips,
And then, in keen delight,
He sighed, "I bet them ten to one
That you'd propose to night!"

—Life.

One starry night in June;

Three Summer Dangers.

Three summer dangers menace the household and traveler at every turn. They are climate, food and water. To guard against them requires judgment, abstinence, and SANFORD'S GINGER.

SANFORD'S GINGER, compounded of imported ginger, choice aromatics, and French brandy, convenient, speedy and safe, instantly relieves cramps and pains, speedily checks all forms of summer complaints, prevents indigestion, destroys disease germs in water drunk, restores the circulation and digestion when suspended by a chill,—a frequent cause of cholera morbus,—breaks up colds and fevers, and wards off malarial, contageous, and epidemic influences.

As a pure fruit stimulant for the aged, mentally and physically overworked, for delicate females, especially mothers, and as a means of reforming those addicted to an excessive use of alcoholic stimulants, it is invaluable.

Never travel without SANFORD'S GINGER.

Beware of worthless "gingers" offensively urged by mercenary druggists and dealers on those who call for and desire only

Sanford's Ginger,
THE DELICIOUS SUMMER MEDICINE.

Baby's Pigs.

Ten little pigs that grow and thrive,
Rosy and plump and clean;
Two little pens, each holding five,
And the owner is Baby 'Gene.
They wriggle about and root and dig,
And push again and again,
Till at last we find one dear little pig
Is out of the little red pen.

Baby 'Gene is a little old man,
Bald, and serious, too,
He looks to the pigs whenever he can,
But he has a great deal to do.
And this little pig says he'll get some corn,
And the next one cries, “O where?”
And the little one says, “In grandpa's barn!”
And the great one knows it's there.

Four pearly grains he can plainly see;
Have them he must and will;
He strains and struggles—but “quee—quee—quee,”
He can't get over the sill!
So he's given it up, and off he goes
(With Grandfather 'Gene before),
Snubbing and rubbing his little bare nose
On the way to the pantry door.

You queer little pig, you're ever so bold,
But it never, never will do!
The great wide world would be cruel and cold
To a little pink mite like you.
Mamma must bring her needle and yarn
And build up the fence again,
For the five little pigs would be quite forlorn
Outside the little red pen.

LEARNING HIS VALUE.

Mr. Marcus Wilkinson sat alone in his office, with a dainty little perfumed note between his fingers, and a puzzled frown upon his brow. The note directed in a graceful feminine hand was brief:

DEAR GUARDIAN:—I will be at your office at ten in the morning, to consult you upon a matter of importance.

MILLIE.

“A matter of importance,” muttered Mr. Wilkinson, twisting the note nervously. “Can my fears be true? Has Cyril Ormsby proposed to my pearl? I am afraid he has! And what can I say? What can I urge against the man, if Millie's own instincts have played her false? Ten o'clock!”

The last silvery stroke of the mantle-clock had not died away when the door of the office was opened by a clerk, and Millie Bently entered the room.

Just a few words to describe the ward of whom Marcus Wilkinson always thought as a pearl, a lilly, everything pure and fair. She was of medium height, slender and graceful, with a thoughtful face of exquisite beauty.

Very young, only eighteen, Millie Bently had borne early the sorrows of life. Her father, having been wealthy, failed in business, and committed suicide. Her mother, delicate and helpless, had fought poverty feebly for two years, and sinking under privations and toil, had contracted a fatal disease. When all hope of life was over, the news came that Millie's uncle, dying abroad, had left a large fortune to his only sister. A will was made by the dying woman leaving her own too lately won independence to Millie, and appointing their old friend, Marcus Wilkinson, as guardian to the heiress.

Sorrowing, and womanly beyond her years, Millie had turned from her own grief to a noble endeavor to solace some of the trials of those with whom her own poverty had made her familiar. A cousin had come at Mr. Wilkinson's request to make a home for his ward, and she resumed many long-interrupted studies. But a large portion of her time was spent in the humble homes of those who had been her mother's friends in the dark days of widowhood; and her gentle charities soon extended far beyond this small circle.

She had been an orphan two years on the day she came to seek Mr. Wilkinson, as already described, and the sorrows of her life had lost some of their bitter sting, leaving only a gentle sadness behind.

“Well, Millie,” the old gentleman said, “what brings to me the pleasure of seeing you to-day?”

“It is about myself,” Millie said, the softest rose-tints flushing her cheeks.

“Dear me! I didn't know you ever took such an insignificant person into consideration at all.”

“Now, Uncle Marc, please don't tease.”

“She wants something enormous,” said the old gentleman, addressing the walls. “Whenever I am Uncle Marc I know what to expect next.”

But just then the kindly man detected signs of trouble in Millie's face; and the jesting voice was turned at once to one of tender gravity.

“What is it, my child?”

“Cyril Omsby came to me last evening, and he will come here today; but I wanted to see you first. He wants me to be his wife, Uncle Marc, and”—she hesitated here—“you do not like him!”

“Who told you that?”

“No one; but I see it for myself.”

“Well, you are right. I do not like him. But my like or dislike has no control over you.”

“No control!” Millie's voice was piteous. “Please don't talk so. I came to you as I would have gone to my father.”

“There, dear, I was wrong. Tell me, then, as you would have told your father, do you love Mr. Ormsby?”

“I think he is the noblest man I ever knew. If you could see him with some of my poor people, how gentle and courteous he is, you would like him, too. He has given me so much sympathy in my work, Uncle Marc, feeling, as I do, that the possession of great wealth is but a stewardship.”

“And so won your love?”

“My respect and admiration, uncle. I cannot yet realize that a man so noble and so good can really desire my companionship and help in his life. But since he does, I am glad and proud to have won his confidence.”

“Hem—yes! Enthusiastic, but heart-whole!” was Mr. Wilkinson's mental comment. “Suppose you and I go for a walk?” he added aloud.

“A walk?” Millie said in a tone of surprise.

“Yes. I have a friend or two I would like to have you see. When I come back I will tell you why I dislike Cyril Ormsby, if,” he added mentally, “you have not already found out.”

It was not exactly such a walk as one would have mapped out for a gentleman's invitation to a young, beautiful girl; but Millie followed its course, leaning upon her guardian's arm, wondering a little, but never hesitating, past the respectable portion of the city, to a quarter known as the “Factory Row,” a place where Mr. Wilkinson had never before allowed his ward to go. For there were apt to be fevers and contagious diseases lurking there. It lay low, and was unhealthy, and the houses were of the meanest description.

“For a noble philanthropist, partly owning these factories and this quarter, Mr. Ormsby seems neglectful,” said Mr. Wilkinson, dryly. “I have an interest in the factories, as you are aware, but do not own one of these wretched houses. They are all Cyril Ormsby's.”

“But,” Millie said eagerly, these people will not let him benefit them. They use his charity for drink; they abuse any privilege he gives them, till he is discouraged in his efforts to do them any good.”

“Oh, step in here!”

It was a poor place, scantily furnished and cheerless. Upon a cot-bed a woman lay, in the last stages of consumption. She looked up eagerly to Mr. Wilkinson.

“I hope you are better,” he said, kindly.

“No, I shall never be better. If I may only die in peace, it is all I ask.”

“Mr. Ormsby will not disturb you now?”

“Jennie has gone to him. Yesterday he sent word that if the rent was not paid at twelve, out we must go. I've paid it regularly for five years, but he don't think of that. All Jennie's made the last month she has had to pay for fire and wood. She's but fifteen, and her pav is small.”

“What do you owe Cyril Ormsby?”

“Thirty shillings.”

“And if he's not paid to-day he will put you out into the street to die!”

“He says the workhouse is the place for paupers.”

At this moment a slim, pale girl of fifteen came in, crying bitterly.

“Mr. Wilkinson was out,” she began; and then seeing her visitors, she cried eagerly, “Oh, Mr. Wilkinson, you will not let mother be put into the street. I'll pay every penny, sir, if only you will wait until she is better, and I can get my full time to work.”

“Have you seen Mr. Ormsby to-day, Jennie?” the old gentleman asked.

Yes, sir. He said he had no time to hear any whining. The agent will be here at twelve, and if the money is not paid, he will put us out.”

“May I?” whispered Millie.

“Just as you please, my dear. Perhaps this dying woman or her child will drink up your charity.”

“Hush, hush!”

So tenderly, so delicately Millie gave her charity, that there was only deepest gratitude awakened without the galling sense of obligation. She left more than sufficient for comfort for some weeks, and promised to send delicacies for the invalid.

No word of herself passed her lips until they were once more in the narrow street.

“Oh, Uncle Marc,” she said, “can it be true that he is so hard, so false to me?”

“Wait,” was the brief reply.

They went into the wide court-yard in whose space stood the four great factories, the joint property of Marcus Wilkinson and Cyril Ormsby, long before divided by the entire opposite management of those two into two different departments—one entirely under the control ef the elder, the other of the younger man.

“Wilkinson's absurd soft-heartedness,” as Cyril mentally characterized it, had made this division absolutely necessary.

But it was not into his own kindly-governed, well-ordered departments that he led his ward. He turned into a small room, where a pale man was busily writing, and at the same time overlooking a large room, where about seventy girls were at work before busily whirling machines.

“Good morning, Watkins,” the old gentleman said. “I was in hopes that you were taking a holiday.”

“Thank you, sir!” was the reply in a dejected tone. “I can't well quit work, sir. There's the wife and six little ones, you see.”

“Have you told Mr. Ormsby that your life depends upon a few weeks of rest and pure air?”

“Yes, sir. He's not keeping me; but he says if I go he must fill my place—and that means starvation for my family. I could never get a new situation, as feeble as I am now.”

“How long have you been here, Mr. Watkins?”

“Seventeen years, sir. I was with old Mr. Ormsby before you came, sir.”

“A faithful servant seventeen years!” said Mr. Wilkinson, in a low tone; “and a few weeks' rest may save his life!”

At this moment Millie shrank a little nearer her guardian. Through a window from which Mr. Watkins overlooked the loom-room she could see Cyril Ormsby, walking briskly about, his voice harsh and imperative, finding fault here and there, and keenly scrutinizing every item of the work. Not a face in the long room was brightened by the presence of the master. Fingers worked more rapidly, eyes were fastened persistently upon the looms, everyone seemed aware of a stern task-master's gaze. But Mr. Wilkinson obeyed the mute petition expressed in the looks of his ward, and led Millie out into a wide passage again, to another work-room.

It were too tedious a task to follow every step of those two as they passed from room to room, everywhere meeting some assurance of Mr. Wilkinson's own hold upon the hearts of the “hands,” and their terror of Cyril Ormsby's harshness.

Out again amongst the squalid homes, where her guardian had no control, but bestowed his kindly charity without ostentation; and here, more eloquently than ever Millie heard how cruel a mockery were the themes of charity and philanthropy that had been poured into her ears. It needed no spoken words from her guardian to tell her that the noble words spoken to win her were but those of hypocrisy, which knew how it could best plead its cause with her.

One and another, turning to Mr. Wilkinson as a friend, unaware of the torture of their words to the kindly lady beside him, told of cruel exactions of work in sickness or trouble, of closest calculation of time, of small wages and heavy rents.

“If we don't live here and pay, we get no work in the factories!” one said, when asked why she did not seek a more healthy quarter.

“I am doing overtime to pay for my child's funeral,” one said, “for I lost the wages for three days. I stayed by her to see her die, and to bury her.”

“I'm uneasy about the rent,” another said, “for I lost a week by a fall on the ice, and it's hard making it up again.”

Not one word of kindly sympathy, of help, in trouble or sickness. The “hands” under Cyril Ormsby were simply human machines to do so much work, sick or well, or pay the price of an hour or day of idleness, no matter how necessary.

There was no words spoken as Mr. Wilkinson and Millie walked to the office again. Once there, the old gentleman spoke, very gravely.

“As your guardian, Millie, I can speak to you no word against Cyril Ormsby. He is a rich man, of good social position, of irreproachable moral reputation, and a man whose standing in business circles is of the highest. A man who is a good match in every worldly sense. So much for your guardian. As your friend, my pearl, who loves you as your own dead father might have loved you, who knows every noble impulse of your pure soul—as that friend, I tell you I would rather see you lying beside your mother than the broken-hearted wife of such a man as Cyril Ormsby.”

“I came to you as a friend, as almost a father,” said Millie, “and I thank you for keeping me from life-long misery. To know my husband such a man as I now know Cyril Ormsby to be, would, as you say, break my heart.”

“I would not tell you,” said her guardian, “for you know I dislike him, and might have thought that dislike prejudiced me. But, Millie, tell me you will not let this day's work shadow your life. You did not love Cyril, Millie?”

“No. I reverenced what I believed to be a noble, generous nature. That reverence a mockery, I shall never break my heart for a man I thoroughly despise, Uncle Marc.”

And so it happened that Cyril Ormsby, coming to claim the fortune he believed within his grasp, met only Mr. Wilkinson, with Millie's polite but distinct refusal to resign herself or her fortune to his keeping.

But he never knew how it was that Millie learned the true value of his hollow words of charity and philanthropy.

THEIR FIRST DINNER.

They had just returned from their wedding tour and were to have their first dinner in their own home.

“Well, Percy, dear,” she said sweetly after breakfast, “what shall we have for dinner?”

“Oh, anything you like.”

“No, dear; anything you like.”

“But I shall like anything you like, my little rosebud.”

“And I shall like anything you like, you precious old boy.”

“Well, then, what shall we have, dear?”

“Whatever you want, darling!”

“But I want to please you,” lovely.

“And I want to please you, precious.”

“You old darling!”

“You blessed old precious.”

“But what shall we have?”

“That's for you to say.”

“No, for you!”

“But I'm so afraid I'll order something you don't like.”

“I'll like anything you like, darling!”

“Truly, Percy?”

“Truly, my darling.”

“Because I'd feel so badly I'd just cry if I had anything you don't like. Do you like roast beef?”

“Do you?”

“I asked you first, dearie?”

“What if I don't care for it?”

“Then we'll never have a pound of it in the house.”

“You little darling!”

“But do you like it?”

“Do you?”

“O, Percy, you naughty old boy! How am I ever to get what you like if you go on like this? And I do want to please you.”

“Please yourself and you'll be sure to please me.”

“Then we'll have the beef.”

“If you say so, lovey.”

“But I don't say so.”

“It shall be just as my own little, lovey-dovey, lifey-wifey says.”

“No, just as my treasure boy says.”

“What if I say beef too.”

“Well, then, we'll have roast beef?”

“I love roast beef.”

“So do I.”

“Oh, I'm so glad.”

“You old darling!”

“You precious!”—Detroit Free Press.

A Hammock Story.

My lady dreams with unshut eyes,
Under the apple boughs I see,
Where on her breeze-blown couch she lies,
The fairest thing beneath the skies—
Ah! dare I hope she dreams of me?

Her hair is like the sunbeam's gold,
Her face an angel's well might be,
Her form is cast in beauty's mold,
Her loveliness cannot be told
E'en by a worshipper like me.

I cannot leave her musing there
And go my way when only she
My heart and life and joy can share—
Ah! lady fair, dear lady fair,
I come to thee! I come to thee!

She heard his footfall as he came,
And suddenly across her cheek
There swept a vivid scarlet flame,
She trembled as he breathed her name,
But not an answer did she speak.

Her lace-bound hat she lightly drew
Close to her brows, and he—oh, he,
Bent near to her eyes of blue,
And with a look that thrilled her through,
He asked her king of dreams to be.

There was a tender thrill of bliss
From the brown nest above the two,
After the silence of a kiss,
As, with a look love would not miss
For heaven, she said, “I dreamed of you!”

CHILDREN'S LUNCHES.

A child at play from morning until night, in the air open air, will make way with an incredible amount of food, and be healthier for so doing. But let it rely upon the regular hours for taking it. It will then enjoy the blessing of coming to the table hungry, for that certainly is a blessing, as those deprived of an appetite can heartily testify. Nor is it any sign of distress that they are clamorous for their meal to be served, their keen appetites only assuring you that there is not much probability of complaints being made of the dishes set before them, provided always there is enough.

A prominent physician and surgeon once said of his three children who were then well grown youths, and the picture of health: “We never allowed our children to lunch between meals, and they are all good eaters; we never allowed them tea and coffee, and they are all good sleepers.” All those same children have since graduated from colleges and are holding high positions to-day in the professional world, robust and of excellent habits, though inheriting a frail constitution from a mother who died young.

The annoyances and discomforts arising from this habit of lunching must be innumerable; the interruptions of your time for reading, sewing, or social calls, by a hungry child, demanding attention, that will not be set aside; the untidiness that must follow the preparation of even plain bread and butter, for one, two or three children; the extra steps required from either servant or parent, these alone make strong plea against the habit; but when we consider the violation of the whole dietary system, and all the evils that stand waiting to give them a grip of punishment for their indulgence, we cannot help crying out against the evil and urge a better understanding of all laws of digestion, and what is quite as important, indigestion.

Pope says “the proper study of mankind is man,” and certainly no part of man, and his habits, needs more careful looking after than the food he eats, and the regularity with which he partakes of it; and children are but men on a little smaller scale. If men are so easily led into bad habits, both useless and debasing, by contact with bad campanions, why should we expect our children to be free from the same weakness of copying these habits.—Good Housekeeping.

THE FER-DE-LANCE.

There are eight varieties of him (the fer-de-lance), the most common being the gray speckled with black, precisely the color that enables the monster to hide himself among the roots of the trees by simply coiling about them and concealing his triangular head. Sometimes he is a beautiful yellow flower; then he may never be distinguished from a bunch of bananas among which he hangs coiled; or he may be a dark yellow, or a yellowish-brown, or the color of wine less speckled with pink and black or a perfect ash tint, or black with a yellow belly, or black with a rose belly—all hues of a tropical mould, of old bark, of putrifying trees of forest detritus. The iris of the eye is orange, with red flashes; at night it glows like incandescent charcoal.

And the fer-de-lance reigns absolute king over the mountains and the ravines; he is lord of the forests and the solitudes by day, and by night he extends his dominion over the public roads, the familiar paths, the parks, the pleasure resorts. People must remain at home after dark, unless they dwell in the city itself; if you happen to be out visiting after sunset, only a mile from town, your friends will caution you anxiously not to follow the boulevard as you go back, and to keep as closely as possible to the very centre of the path. Even in the brightest noon you cannot venture into the woods unescorted; you cannot trust your eyes to detect danger; at any moment a seeming branch, a knot of lianas, a pink or gray root, a clump of pendant yellow fruit, may suddenly take life, writhe, swell, stretch, spring, strike. Then you will need aid indeed, and most quickly; for within the space of a few heart beats the stricken flesh chills, tumefies, softens, changes color, stops violaceously, and an icy coldness crawls through all the blood If the physician or the pauseur arrives in time, and no artery or vein has been directly pierced, there is hope; but the danger is not passed when the life has been saved. Necrosis of the tissues begins; the flesh corrupts, tatters, tumbles from the bone: and the colors of its putrefactions are frightful mockeries of the hues of vegetable death, of forest decompositions, the ghastly pinks and grays and yellows of rotting trunks and roots melting back into the thick fetid clay that gave them birth. You moulder as the trees moulder; you crumble and dissolve as dissolves the substance of the balatas and the palms and the acomats; the Death-of-the-Woods has seized upon you!

And this pestilence that walketh in darkness, destruction that wasteth at noonday, may not be exercised. Each female produces vivabarously from 40 to 60 young at a birth. The haunts of these creatures are in many cases inaccessible, inexplorable; its multiplication is prodigious; it is only the surplus of its swarming that overpours into the cane-fields and makes the highroads perilous after sunset, yet to destroy three or four hundred thanatophidia on a single small plantation during the lapse of 12 months has not been uncommon. The introduction of the mantouste (the ichneumon) may, it is hoped, do much toward protecting the workers in the cane fields and on the cocoa and coffee plantations; but the montouste's powers are limited, and the ocean of death is illimitable.

The experience of fear has enabled domestic animals to discern the presence of the enemy while invisible to man. Your horse rears and plunges in the darkness, trembles and sweats; do not try to ride on until you are assured the way is clear—your animal has preceived far ahead two scintillating points, two moving sparks of fire. Or your dog may come running back, whining, shivering; accept his warning. The animals kept about country residences have learned to fight for their lives, the hen battles hopelessly for her chickens, the bull tries to gore his supple enemy, the pig gives more successful combat; but the creature who fears the monster least is the brave cat. Seeing a snake, she at once carries her kittens to a place of safety, then boldly advances to the encounter. She will walk to the very limit of the serpent's striking range, and begin to feint, teasing him, trying to draw his blow. How the emerald and the topazine eyes glow then—they are flames. A moment more, and the triangular head, hissing from the coil, flashes swift as if moved by wings. But swifter still the strong stroke of the armed paw that smites the horror aside, flinging it mangled and gasping, in the dust. Nevertheless, pussy does not yet dare to spring; the enemy, still active, has almost instantly reformed his coil; but she is again in front of him, watching—vertical pupil against vertical pupil. Again the lashing stroke; again the beautiful countering; the living death is hurled aside, the scaled skin is deeply torn, one eye-socket has ceased to flame. Once more the stroke of the serpent; once more the light, quick, cutting blow. But now the trigonocephalus is blind, is stupified; before he can attempt to coil, pussy has leaped upon him, nailing the horrible flat head fast to the ground with her two sinewy paws. Now let him lash, writhe, twine, strive to strangle her—in vain! he will never lift his head; an instant more, and he lies still; the fine white teeth of the cat have severed the vertebræ just behind the triangular skull.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, AUGUST 10, 1888.

WHEN J. Q. A. Brackett was made lieutenant-governor it was supposed he would bring to that office quite as much character and ability as most of his predecessors had possessed. Report now comes from Boston, however, that Mr. Brackett has failed to "develop," and he is regarded by the friends of Gov. Ames as a serious obstacle to the latter's success in the present campaign. It is also asserted that the governor will be put to great disadvantage in the convention by reason of the strength which the name of our own Mr. Haile will give to the Draper ticket. This truly is a state of affairs which ought no longer to be permitted. Col. Campbell should not, under any circumstances, allow the governor to enter the canvass weighted. If necessary Mr. Brackett must be asked to step down and out, and Mr. Haile should be appealed to to give both candidates the benefit of his great popularity by putting no restrictions on the use of his name.

JUDGE ADIN THAYER, who in a fit of despondency took his life at his home in Worcester last Saturday morning, was in many respects a remarkable man. He had been judge of probate in Worcester county for a number of years, and had discharged the duties of that office with so much conscientiousness and fidelity that no one ever had occasion to utter a word of unfavorable comment. It was as a politician, however, that Judge Thayer was principally known. His whole business life had been spent in the city in which he died, and when that city became the center of so much political influence he was a recognized power, and no one rendered the Republican party more constant and conspicuous service. He was a quiet, unostentatious man, and his hand was oftener seen in the result of campaign work than in the active agencies by which the work appeared to be controlled. He was a profound student of politics, and in the management of political affairs exhibited a shrewdness and sagacity which, combined with his agressive nature, stamped him as a leader of a very high order. In politics, as in business, he was thoroughly honest, and nothing could swerve him from what he thought was right. As a man he was eminently social and companionable, and he will be missed by a large circle of acquaintances, scarcely one of whom will fail to mourn him as a sincere and trusted friend.

SINCE Gen. Sheridan's removal to Nonquitt the favorable bulletins issued from day to day by his attending physician have given the public cause to believe that he was steadily improving, and that his restoration to health was only a question of time. In view of this the announcement Monday morning that the general had died suddenly the previous night was a great surprise to those who had not a full understanding of the nature of his case. It now seems that the disease from which Gen. Sheridan was suffering was known to medical men as entirely incurable, and it is said that, considering its character, his physicians are entitled to great credit for prolonging his life so long. Gen. Sheridan's wide renown rested wholly on his military achievements in our late civil war. Although then a comparatively young man, from the beginning of his career he exhibited so many of the qualities of a great soldier that he was given important commands, and became one of the most skillful and successful of our military leaders. In fitting recognition of his services Congress revived the rank of General during his last sickness, and the president immediately appointed him to that position. Among many great commanders which our war developed few will be held in more grateful remembrance than General Phil Sheridan.

A Word of Caution.

There is no law which prevents the admirers of Mr. Blaine from expressing their high respect and personal regrad for him in such manner as their convenience or inclination may suggest. It is true he is a mere man, and at present bears none of the honors of official station, but if, notwithstanding this, men of character and standing feel that, for any reason, it is due to him that he should receive marked and exceptional attention at their hands, it is clearly a matter which concerns them personally, but with which the general public has very little to do. When, however, it is proposed to utilize such exhibitions of personal regard in the interest of the Republican party, there is reason to fear that a serious blunder is being committed, and that the effect will be quite the reverse of what is really intended.

The Republican party has put in nomination as its candidate for the presidency a man whose ability and character have secured for him a full measure of its confidence and respect; a man who can safely be entrusted with the duties which are likely to devolve upon him in view of his own capacity and experience, and who is entitled to recognition as the trusted leader of the party which has placed him at its head. Whatever may be said to the credit of Mr. Blaine he is not to-day the candidate of the Republican party. It is equally true that, regardless of the real facts as to his fitness for the office, he would not be acceptable to a large class of influential Republicans were a new candidate now to be selected. Nothing therefore ought to be plainer than the danger which is so certain to result from the personal prominence which Republican leaders insist upon giving him in the present canvass.

His loyalty to the principle of his party, his devotion to its interests, as well as his extraordinary ability and influence, should of course be recognized, and they can all be turned to good account if used in the right direction. But care should be taken that it does not become too evident that the success of the Republican party means to a large extent, the success of Mr. Blaine, and of such political doctrines as he may choose to promulgate; that it means Harrison only nominally at the head of the government, with Blaine dictating its entire policy; that in short it means Blaine for president, and not the man whom the people are asked to elect. We have no desire or purpose to discredit Mr. Blaine, but we insist that he should not be placed between the voters and Harrison, and there so magnified as wholly to obscure the latter.

The Thorndikes were defeated on the church grounds last Saturday by the Spencers, the score being 11 to 9. The home club claims to have out-played the visitors at every point, and to have won the game, but the umpire's rank decisions gave the visitors the most runs. At the last half of the eighth inning the score was 9 to 5 in favor of the home team, when out of 20 balls pitched the umpire refused to call a strike, sending four men to bases on balls, thus giving the visitors one run, when a hit over the right field fence brought in four runs and won the game. It is claimed the umpire made three different decisions on one point before he settled which he would call it. The Thorndikes would like to play the Spencers for $50 a side on enclosed grounds, with an uninterested umpire.

Saloons Raided.

Officers raided the Monson House and the dive under Curley's block Saturday night. At the Monson House they secured a keg of beer, while the bar-keeper showed the people who were about at the time some lively trotting through Main street. It is rumored that perhaps there was something under those blankets. At the dive, those who were in the saloon at the time the officers entered were presented with a bottle of liquor so quickly the officers did not "catch on." One bottle of liquor met the eyes of one of the officers, who made a determined grab for it, but too late, bottle, contents and all went through the door and was smashed. A keg of beer was found and confiscated. During the raid Officer Underwood was searching the place with a light, to this John Curley objected, and tried to obtain possession of the light. In the struggle that followed Curley was arrested, handcuffed, and taken to Palmer, but was bailed out, and had a hearing before the district court yesterday. Those who have commenced to enforce the law are to be commended for the steps already taken, and it is hoped some of these rum holes will be closed up.

George W. Johnson, for the past two years machinist for Fay, Peck & Co., has accepted a position with a South Framingham firm, and will commence work there October 1.

George L. Keeney and family are enjoying a carriage drive through the Connecticut valley, visiting Mr. Keeney's father in Vernon, Ct., and stopping at other places.

R. A. Coltman, for four years sizer for Fay, Peck & Co., has secured a position in a South Framingham shop, and will leave for his new field of labor in six weeks.

DISTINGUISHED writers on political economy have been inclined to treat the subject of a protective tariff as one involving a large share of the learning of which they were masters. In the discussion of its merits and demerits as compared with the policy of free trade they have elaborated upon it as a theory, and marshaled statistics bearing upon its practical results, in a manner which proved at once that their knowledge was profound and exhaustive. According to modern notions, however, the problem which has so long perplexed the schoolmen is really no problem at all. Politics appear to have demonstrated that the rule-of-three is an insoluble enigma compared with the simplicity of the most intricate questions relating to the tariff. The suggestion is made that the present campaign is a school in which every voter has become a student of the principles of our American system of protection. It would seem so, and that every student considers that he has mastered the subject, and is qualified to graduate and become a teacher. Verily our young men have become wiser in their generation than the children of light.

THE POLITICAL OUTLOOK.

AS SEEN BY A NORTHERN MAN IN ALABAMA.

OAK GROVE,
SHELBY, ALA., July 30, 1888.

EDITOR JOURNAL.—When your townsman was here I had very little opportunity to write for the JOURNAL, as he wanted all the space, but now he has disappeared from the scene and I feel inclined to say a word on the political situation, the inclination having been prompted by the article in last week's JOURNAL headed "Local Views on Tariff Reform," which gives the very reasons why the laboring man and the farmer all want protection, and if our Republican friends of the north would all confine their arguments in the present campaign to such facts, and scatter them generously throughout the South, they would win thousands of votes. What men most desire is a convincing argument based upon actual figures, not a harangue about dead issues, and the war cry of 1861-65—these only have a tendency to embitter the people and make them feel that they have to live over the reconstruction days again. All this is folly, and worse than folly; let by-gones be by-gones, and come squarely to the question of the development of the country in such a way that the greatest number will be benefitted; make the tariff the question at issue, and bring the potent facts to sustain the protection plank in our platform, and leave out all the old dead issues; put the Republican sentiments in pleasing, truthful language, and scatter it broadcast—it will bear light of day, and if carried on fairly will win. There is nothing to be said about the candidates in this campaign, and nothing remains but to keep "Free Trade and Protection" squarely to the front as the party questions, and when they all stand up to be counted, the protectionists will greatly outnumber their opponents, because there is no sane man who does not prefer to see his own prosper. What will do most for him?—why, that which gives the laboring man the greatest return for his work, and encourages his employer to advance along the line of his industry. This state, of course, will go for the administration, but we see the sentiment being forged into shape that will ere many years require her members of congress to vote for protective measures if they expect to be returned to their seats. In my door yard floats the stars and stripes, appended is the banner inscribed, "Harrison and Morton," while on an elevation east of my window is a taller pole and a larger flag. I am comforting our Democratic friends with the thought that their flag will have the greatest distance to fall. By-the-way, I am told that the idea of appending the names of the candidates to a flag and unfurling it to the breeze is a novel idea in nearly all the country round about, and it really has drawn out quite a good many comments from the people who express their admiration and pleasure at seeing it. I believe no more loyal people live in any country than we find here, and the greatest difficulty experienced is the lack of knowledge of each other—the Northern and the Southern people. The more they mingle the better they like each other. Next week the state elections take place, and all the local candidates of all parties go about their own districts and present in person their individual claims to the office, and it is an amusing feature, too, that several of them who do not speak at all must go along and show themselves to the voters, which to a Northern man seems queer enough.

WYOMING LIFE.

RANCH IN SOUTHERN WYOMING,
July 31, 1888.

We have just returned from a camping tour in the mountains, having started the 14th from the ranch, which is situated on the Atlantic slope about half a mile from, and perhaps 500 feet below, the Great Divide. The waters which fall on the eastern slope of this divide flow into the Atlantic, while that which is precipitated on the western side makes its way into the Pacific. Although on either side of this dividing line there may be and indeed are mountain peaks of greater elevation, this continuous dividing ridge winds about like a river, clear on through the continent, turning its waters east or west, and is really the backbone of the Rocky Mountains. The mountains of Southern Wyoming and Northern Colorado do not rise to so great an elevation as further south—but we get well up into rarified, air so that one exercising actively soon gets exhausted and is obliged to stop for rest. Our greatest elevation has been about 11,000 feet. This is about timber line, 11,500 feet being the average elevation at which timber ceases to grow in the Rocky Mountains. In the East timber stops at much lower altitude. The aspen, which with us grows at about sea level, is not usually found here much lower than 4500 feet. On Mt. Washington timber is not found at all, I think, at an altitude but little above this, that being timber line for that region. Here above the aspen we find the pines in variety. Aspens are frequently seen of large size. I saw one two feet in diameter and eighty feet or more in height.

Our route has been in a southerly direction. From the Atlantic we passed to the Pacific slope, then to the Atlantic and again to the Pacific side of the great backbone of the continent. Although I have been on the move through this range for nearly three weeks, I have but a feeble idea of the magnitude and extent or sublimity of this great pile of mountains. The more we see of them the more impressive they become. In this vicinity the breadth of this great range is about 100 miles, while further south they cover about twice that distance from east to west. Passable roads run through the mountains in various directions, and one can drive from here to Denver over a tolerable roadway, used by the ranchmen—who are found scattered well up in the mountains—by cattle men and sheep men who summer their stock in the mountains, and by miners. Ranchmen and miners procure their supplies mostly from Rawlins, Wyo., or from Denver, Col., in some cases hauling their goods in wagons over these rough roads a distance of 125 or more miles. There are a few bridges, but streams are crossed in most cases by fording. The scenery in many localities is fine. Snow which never disappears is often seen on the highest mountains. We have had extensive views and been in the deep canyons, both of which called forth difficult climbing by ourselves or horses, and frequently by both. The mountains contain many elevated table lands and open fertile parks and valleys, sometimes bearing only sage brush, owing to the absence of water, others covered by various kinds of native grasses, weeds, flowers, etc. I saw patches of considerable size with a good growth of grass free from weeds, the grass being somewhat similar to our red-top, but taller. These open parks and valleys are of all sizes, from a few acres in extent to the size of North Park, which extends about 40 miles in either direction.

Our party consisted of five persons, six horses and four dogs—a pair of Siberian blood hounds, a gaze hound and a water spaniel. We carried a tent, bedding, supplies and so forth. I saw many birds and flowers new to me, a few of the latter rivalling those cultivated by us in gardens.

The locality through which we have been is said to be the best game region in the United States. We had no reason to doubt this, as we found game in abundance, having personally seen between 200 and 300 head of deer, antelope and elk, and this without effort or seeking game on our part, if we except the elk, which at this season seek the high mountains among the pines or other large timber, and consequently one must go aside from the ordinary path of travel to see them. I saw one bear about half grown, and while endeavoring to get a shot at him I lost a fine bull elk which a member of the party saw and pointed out for me to secure. Our table has been well supplied with trout, sage chickens, pine hens, deer and antelope. Some of the streams abound in trout and we readily caught with the fly all we cared to eat, in sizes from 1-8 to 1 1-2 pounds each. I secured two deer and two antelopes and badly wounded one bull elk which we failed to secure. Had we the inclination of some of our Eastern so-called sportsmen, we could have shot much more game, as the antelope and deer are very plenty and easy to get. In one or two cases as we rode along on horse-back a deer would run its head from behind the bushes within 100 feet of us and gaze at us until we had passed out of sight. It was not uncommon on getting up in the morning to see one or more antelope within easy gun shot of our camp, apparently curious at the sight of our tent. We saw fawn lying in shady retreats and once approached within six or eight feet of them before they took fright. One ranchman has been catching young antelope, deer and elk for a New York party. At his ranch we saw nine elk and sixteen deer fawn, ten antelope kids and one black bear cub, all of which he had caught to send East in the fall. In some localities sage hens are very abundant. We secured more than twenty of the spring chickens during a half-day's ride with a 22-calibre rifle. They are quite tame and are found in coveys of twenty to forty. With a shot gun hundreds can be bagged in a day, but there is no sport in this method with game so plenty. These chickens weigh about 1 1-4 pounds dressed and are fine eating, either fried, broiled or stewed. I call them superior to domestic chickens. We passed a thickly settled prairie-dog town extending, more than a mile, while the dogs were to be seen in less numbers for eight or ten miles. F. shot a coyote through the head while the animal was on the run and 300 yards distant. We saw several badgers, but did not shoot any. So far as game is concerned I have had all the hunting I care for, barring the desire to capture a bear or possibly a mountain goat. F. noticed the illustration in the Forest and Stream of July 5th of the mountain goat, and recognized it as what he has called the ibex, a number of which he has killed. I did not know there was an ibex in America. Are the ibex, so-called by Rocky Mountain hunters, and the mountain goat the same species? Buffalo heads and horns are frequently seen, probably the remains of buffalo killed by the Indians twenty or more years ago, as the buffalo is not known to have frequented the table lands in this vicinity since their occupancy by the white settlers. What are called the wallow holes of this animal were often seen by us. The new model (1886) Winchester rifle is being considerably used here in place of the older models. I have seen but one 44-40. Of the new models we have seen 40-60, 40-65, 45-70 and 45-90. The cartridges for these sizes are found on sale in this vicinity.

A few quotations of Rocky Mountain products may be of interest to you. We pay for milk 10 cents a quart, butter 35 cents a pound, 33 cents per dozen for eggs, while of the same man we bought five well grown chickens for 15 cents each. Was not this killing the goose which laid the golden egg?

A word relating to our dogs—they soon became foot-sore, and the larger ones had to be carried in the mess wagon, while their greatest usefulness seemed to be a persistent determination to occupy our beds on frosty nights, to the discomfort. I might almost say exclusion, of humans. Our water (?) spaniel was a curious specimen of his kind, being afraid of the water, and frequently begged to ride over the fords. He had great ability in one direction, however—when we practice with the rifle while in camp, he would invariable find the direction and the very locality of our bullets, even if we were shooting at an object 300 or 400 yards distant. The setter and the gaze hound were death on jack rabbits and cotton tails. The spaniel would scent them out and the hound would as a rule run them down.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, Aug. 8, 1888.

This evening a meeting of the representatives of the Republican clubs of the state was held in the rooms of the Republican state committee. Some fifty of them in all were present, and George A. Marden of Lowell was in the chair. Reports were made by the different committees which have charge of the work of the league, and the feeling was quite hopeful. There are now 122 clubs in the state, of which 85 have signed the constitution of the state league. It is the plan of the league to give a great public demonstration at the time of the Blaine reception at Hotel Vendome, and the committee on demonstration consists of Lieut. Gov. Brackett, Ashton E. Hemphill of Holyoke, Joseph O. Burdett of Hingham, C. A. Shepard of Danvers and Z. C. Fields of Milton. A great painting of Blaine has been prepared by Berthrong, the well-known portrait-painter for political clubs, and it will be displayed at the Vendome on that occasion.

One of the most important parts of the meeting to-day was the presentation of reports of the committee on local organization. It advised the most thorough organization in all of the cities and towns, and went into much detail. It recommends that accurate lists be made of all tax payers who are on the voting lists, and that they be classified by streets or some other regular way. Then they are to be marked so that it can be seen at a glance who is a Republican, Democrat, Independent, Prohibitionist or alien. The Republicans are to do all that is necessary to get their own names on the lists; they are to pay particular attention to prompt registration, to the registration of young men who will vote this year for the first time, to the registration of aliens after they have been naturalized, to the hunting up and registration of voters who have been lost sight of, and most of all, to the getting out of the vote of every voter on election day. The report was accepted and the state committee promises its coöperation. Republicans are also expected to do all they can to help along the work of the regular committees which have this part of the political machinery in charge. The young men were quite enthusiastic, and will do all they can to make the organization effective.

The Democrats have at last stirred themselves a little, but they are not yet able to say who will be the speakers at their first rally, which will be held on the evening of August 23. They are in correspondence with some of their most prominent congressmen, and hope to have here some speakers who will start their campaign with a rush. They have not yet distributed any documents of their own, but are waiting for a supply from the Democratic national committee.

The Prohibitionists are planning for a great display of campaign oratory at their first rally, which is to be held in Tremont Temple September 5. The list of attractions includes Gov. Clinton B. Fisk, their candidate for the presidency, Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, Revs. O. P. Clifford and J. W. Hamilton, and Judge Pitman. Gen. Fisk has an engagement at Northampton for the afternoon of September 6, and will be in Springfield on that evening. The secretary of the Prohibitory state committee, Frank P. Dyer, tells me that they have all the money they want for carrying on the campaign. If your readers observe an unusual number of Prohibitory flags flying, they may attribute them to the aggressive policy of this committee, which has made special terms with the flag sellers, and is able to furnish them at reduced rates. They are in doubt about the nominee of their party for governor. Some of them want Eugene H. Clapp of East Boston, and others want William B. Earle of Worcester, who was their candidate last year. It was the understanding of the managers at Worcester a year ago that Clapp should have the nomination this year. He is one of the wealthiest men in the party, and is able to give freely. But he has business interests to attend to and is not as willing as he was a year ago, and the particular friends of Earle do not see any good reason why he should be set aside after serving so well last year. So the situation is very much in doubt. A letter was received at the prohibitory headquarters this forenoon saying that Samuel Dickie, the chairman of the executive committee of the national committee, would be present at the state convention.

More activity than ever is evidently being put into the fight for the governorship by the friends of Draper and Ames. The former are heard of in different parts of the state, and a part of the gossip is that the canvasser in Essex county says that he is to get $200 for his work for the General, and the canvasser on Cape Cod is to receive $500. Each of these stories has enough of detail about it to make it seem plausible, but in each case the information comes to me second hand. Men are traveling for Gen. Draper in the northeast, southeast and west. What they are doing in central Massachusetts has not yet come to my ears. In some districts, even near Boston, there seems to be not a single trace of either candidate, while in other places, Salem for instance, two canvassers in the interest of Draper have been seen. I imagine that Col. Campbell does his work for Gov. Ames more by letter and through personal callers at his office than he does by traveling agents. But the Drapers tried their present methods when they were so successful with the division of Milford and the incorporation of Hopedale, and they ought to know what is best. They claim to have a majority of the convention already, but one of their own men privately says that they will not have more that 300 delegates. Jesse N. Gove is credited with promising to give Draper 100 votes from Boston.

One of the latest documents of the Home Market club is entitled "Hard Facts. How Protection Protects." It is made up of quotations from the report of the Massachusetts Bureau of Statistics of Labor, and shows from the words of Col. Carroll D. Wright that wages are much better here than they are in Great Britain; that the average price on all goods used by working men is less than one per cent in favor of Great Britain; that in 37 industries in which the comparison could be make the wages averaged 83.59 per cent higher in Massachusetts than in Great Britain; that the average higher prices of Massachusetts are only 5.80 per cent higher, and that the standard of living of Massachusetts workingmen is to that of British workingmen as 1.42 is to 1. The tariff reform league occasionally has a letter from a Massachusetts man who voted for Blaine in 1884, but will vote for Cleveland in 1888 on account of the tariff issue.

At the meeting of Lieut. Gov. Brackett and the council to-day the resignation of Col. Carroll D. Wright as head of the bureau of labor statistics was accepted, and Horace G. Wadlin of Reading was appointed and confirmed under a suspension of the rules. Arthur Lord of Plymouth was also nominated for civil service commissioner, in place of Charles W. Clifford, resigned. Both appointments are good. Wadlin is a member of the Legislature and might have been promoted to the Senate next year, or, if Speaker Noyes were out of the way, he would have stood a good chance of being speaker of the House. He has been employed for many years in the bureau of labor statistics, has the full confidence of Col. Wright, and is thoroughly competent for his new duties.

Since the illness of Gov. Ames, Lieut. Gov. Brackett has presided at the council meetings and has done all the other official acts of the governor, and has acquitted himself with high credit. His place is threatened as well as the governor's by the Draper movement, and he and Ames will stand or fall together. Mr. Haile of Springfield, his opponent, has an advantage in being on the Republican state committee, but Brackett has warm friends who remember his service in the House.

"The Writer" To Be Enlarged.

So great has been the success of The Writer, the Boston magazine for literary workers, that its publishers propose to enlarge it in January, at the beginning of the next volume, and to encrease the price to two dollars a year. The Writer was started only a year and a half ago, but it has already made itself a permanent place among the standard monthly magazines. It is earnest practical, bright, helpful and interesting, and it stands unique as the only periodical in the world devoted to discussing the practical details of literary production. Its conductors, William H. Hills and Robert Luce, are both trained newspaper men, and the contents of the magazine are full of that practical common sense which is the distinguishing characteristic of successful newspaper workers. Articles in the August number for instance, warn writers against dependence upon "Moods" show them a practical "Use for Scrap-Books," make a critical analysis of "Newspaper Information and Editorial Preferences," and discuss "Ideas, and How They Are Discovered," with other interesting topics. Puzzling questions about all sorts of practical matters connected with literary work are answered in an interesting way, and a score of "Helpful Hints and Suggestion" to writers are given. There is also a unique reference list of about 120 "Literary Articles in Periodicals," printed during July. The price of The Writer is 10 cents a number; one dollar a year. ## SLAUGHTER!

Is a very mild expression for the sacrifice in prices which S. H. Hellyar & Co. have just inaugurated. We find ourselves with $10,000 worth of goods more than we need, and more than we ought to have at this season of the year, and have accordingly made prices on some that cannot help but move it quickly. Our $18 and $15 Suits will be sold for $10. Our $12 and $10 Suits reduced to $7.50. A large line of $5 Pants reduced to $3.50. We have the best $2 Pant ever sold for that money. Men's Working Pants reduced to 75 cents. Our Boys' Suit department shows the greatest sacrifice in prices of any department in our store. $8 Suits reduced to $3. $5 Suits now $2. Sailor Suits, brown and blue, 62 cents. Boys' Short Pants from 25 cents upward. These are a sample of the low prices which we are now offering, and it will behoove all who desire to make a dollar without any exertion on their part to visit this great sale of Men's and Boys' Clothing.

INHERITED DISEASES.

In the realm of disease the facts of inheritance are most numerous and are daily accumulating. Here, alas, they become terrible, fateful and overwhelming. No fact of nature is more pregnant with awful meaning than the fact of the inheritance of disease. It meets the physician on his daily rounds, paralyzing his art and filling him with dismay. The legend of the ancient Greeks picture the Furies as pursuing families from generation to generation, rendering them desolate. The Furies still apply their work of terror and death, but they are not now clothed in the garb of superstition, but appear in the more intelligible but no less awful form of hereditary disease.

Modern science, which has illuminated so many dark corners of nature, has shed a new light on the ominous word of the Scriptures, "The sins of the fathers shall be visited upon the children unto the third and fourth generation." Instances of hereditary disease abound. Fifty per cent of cases of consumption, that fearful destroyer of families, of cancer and scrofula, run in families through inheritance. Insanity is hereditary in a marked degree, but, fortunately, like many other hereditary diseases, tends to wear itself out, the stock becoming extinct. A distinguished scientist truly says: "No organ or texture of the body is exempt from the chance of being the subject of hereditary disease." Probably more chronic diseases, which permanently modify the structure and functions of the body, are more or less liable to be inherited. The important and far-reaching practical deductions from such facts—affecting so powerfully the happiness of individuals and families and the collective welfare of the nation—are obvious to reflecting minds, and the best means of preventing or curing these diseases is the subject of intense interest to all. Fortunately nature has provided a remedy, which experience has attested as infallible, and the remedy is the world's famous Swift's Specific, a pure vegetable compound — nature's antidote for all blood poisons. To the afflicted it is a blessing of inestimable value. An interesting treatise on "Blood and Skin Diseases," will be mailed free by addressing

Bad Prayers.

I do not like to hear him pray
On bended knee about an hour,
For grace to spend aright the day,
Who knows his neighbor has no flour.

I'd rather see him go to mill
And buy the luckless brother bread,
And see his children eat their fill
And laugh beneath their humble shed.

I do not like to hear him pray,
"Let blessing on the widow be,"
Who never seeks her home, to say,
"If want o'er takes you, come to me."

I hate the prayer so loud and long
That's offered for the orphan's weal,
By him who sees him crushed by wrong,
And only with his lips doth feel.

I do not like to hear her pray
With jeweled ear and silken dress,
Whose washerwoman toils all day,
And then is asked to work for less.

Such pious shavers I despise;
With folded hands and face demure,
They lift to heaven their "angel eyes,"
And steal the earning of the poor.

I do not like such soulless prayers;
If wrong, I hope to be forgiven,
No angel-wing them upward bears;
They're lost a million miles from heaven.

Sympathetic old lady (to convict)—Ah, my unfortunate friend, your fate is indeed a hard one, and as she thinks of you here in this dreadful place, how your poor wife must suffer!

Convict (very much affected)—Wh—which one, mum? I'm up for bigamy.—Life.

Pulmonary Affections. Brown—"You don't look well, lately, Robinson." Robinson—"No; I can't sleep well at night on account of lung trouble." Brown—"Nonsense; your lungs are all right." Robinson—"Yes, mine are, the trouble is with the baby's."—Life.

"These fish, my dear Mrs. Hendricks,"remarked a minister, who was discussing a Sunday dinner with the family, "are deliciously fresh, I am enjoying them very much." "They ought to be fresh," volunteered Bobby, who was also enjoying them. "Pa caught them only this morning."—The Epoch.

An old lady on the train in Alabama the other day, who was evidently taking her first ride in the cars, was greatly alarmed while the train was passing over a high trestle. She grasped her seat and held her breath until the opposite side of the chasm was reached, when she gave a deep sigh of relief and exclaimed: "Thank God! she's lit!—Stray.

Teacher "Now, children, here we have the word 'intuition;' who can tell me what it means?" Phenomenally bright scholar: "Intuition is that faculty of the human mind which enables a person to distinguish at a glance a patent medicine advertisement from a real new article.—Stray."

She—"Won't it be delightful when we are married Jim?" He—"Won't it?" She "No conventionalities to bind us and everything lovely." He (who had played a very long game of tennis)—"Yes, and then I can take the rocking chair and you the camp stool without exciting remarks."—Tid-Bits.

Wiggles—"Arabella, darling, may I kiss you?" Arabella—"Yes, sweetest; but kiss me on the left cheek, please." Wiggles (doing so) "And may I ask, dearest, why the left cheek?" Little brother (poking his head through the door)—"Because Jack Waggles has been kissing her right cheek all the afternoon, and it's tired." The engagement is not yet announced.—Town Topics.

She—"Is there anything in this world that is worse than unrequited affection? How many have fallen, how many lives have been blighted, because of that very thing. Can you think of anything more demoralizing to the victim?" He—(gesticulating wildly)—"Well, yes." She—"You can? What is it?" He (recovering his balance)—"A banana skin on the sidewalk."—Lowell Courier.

"So you're a bad man, eh?" "Reckon you're right, stranger." "Came from Bitter Creek?" "That's whar I'm from, and no mistake." "Not afraid of anything that walks, eh?" "Afraid, show me the man——" "Oh, no, I won't show you any man, but I'd like to take you up to the house and introduce you to my wife. I bought her a pair of shoes that didn't fit, and I'm rather afraid to go up alone."—Lincoln Journal.

That Tired Feeling

Is experienced by almost every one in warm weather, and many people resort to Hood's Sarsaparilla to drive away the languor and exhaustion. The blood, laden with impurities which have been accumulating for months, moves sluggishly through the veins, the mind fails to think quickly, and the body is still slower to respond. Hood's Sarsaparilla is just what is needed. It purifies, vitalizes, and enriches the blood, makes the head clear, creates an appetite, overcomes that tired feeling, tones the nervous system, and imparts new strength and vigor to the whole body.

"I was all run down and unfit for business. I was induced to take a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and it built me right up so that I was soon able to resume work. I recommend it to all who are afflicted." D. W. BRATE, stone-cutter, No. 4 Martin St., Albany, N. Y.

Three Summer Dangers.

Three summer dangers menace the household and traveler at every turn. They are climate, food and water. To guard against them requires judgment, abstinence, and SANFORD'S GINGER.

SANFORD'S GINGER, compounded of imported ginger, choice aromatics, and French brandy, convenient, speedy and safe, instantly relieves cramps and pains, speedily checks all forms of summer complaints, prevents indigestion, destroys disease germs in water drunk, restores the circulation and digestion when suspended by a chill,—a frequent cause of cholera morbus,—breaks up colds and fevers, and wards off malarial, contageous, and epidemic influences.

As a pure fruit stimulant for the aged, mentally and physically overworked, for delicate females, especially mothers, and as a means of reforming those addicted to an excessive use of alcoholic stimulants, it is invaluable.

Never travel without SANFORD'S GINGER.

Beware of worthless "gingers" offensively urged by mercenary druggists and dealers on those who call for and desire only

When Janie Milked the Cows.

The daisy held her tiny cup
To catch the dewdrops bright;
The bee had kissed the clover bobs,
And bade them all good night;
The katydid had tuned her song
Among the apple boughs,
And farther stretched the shadows long,
When Janie milked the cows.
The swallow flitted here and there,
The bat had left its bower,
The primrose, with a bashful air,
Unclosed her petaled flower;
The whippoorwill his plaintive tale
Proclaimed 'neath wooded boughs,
And twilight dropped her dusky veil,
While Janie milked the cows.
And Ben, the plow-boy, strolling by,
Comes through the open bars,
While softly in the western sky
Shine out the tranquil stars.
And while the corn-blades whisper low,
Two lovers pledge their vows
Amid the twilight's purple glow,
While Janie milked the cows.

* * * * * *

A little cottage, snug and new,
With hop vines at the door;
The sunbeams, peeping softly through,
Lie dancing on the floor,
And when the first pale evening stars
Shine through the forest boughs,
Young farmer Ben, beside the bars,
Helps Janie milk the cows.

GRACE EGERTON'S LIFE LESSON.

It was Grace Egerton's wedding-day, and she stood fully dressed before her mirror, taking one last look, with a little pardonable vanity, at the pretty figure that was reflected there.

In another hour she would be Mrs. Ernest Redgrave. How hard it was to realize!

She was a vain and frivolous girl. But deep down in the depths of the little worldly heart was a well of true love for Ernest. If she had had to give up all this outside show, she would have been quite content to have gone off all alone with him, and proved how true a wife she could be; but there was no occasion for this, and perhaps even Grace herself knew not how wholly she loved him. She was a spoiled, petted child, and that any solemn duties were entailed in the estate upon which she was just entering, she did not pause to think.

For four weeks she and Ernest traveled; then they came home to their own beautiful home—her father's wedding gift to her. Here a round of festivities awaited them, so that the young couple, for three months, had no single evening to themselves.

"I am tired, Grace. Let us stay at home to-night, darling," said Ernest one evening after dinner, as Grace was about to leave him to make her toilet for some party.

"Absurd, Ernest! You are not growing old already, surely! Besides I promised Mrs. Blessington we would come, and I cannot disappoint her."

"I do not like Mrs. Blessington. I wish you were not so intimate with her; and really, my head aches to-night. Stay at home like a good little girl."

For a moment Grace wavered. She looked within the library, which looked so warm and inviting. She could fancy Ernest stretched on the sofa, while she sat before him, bathing his forehead with some fragant cologne, and thought what a sweet evening they might have. Then she remembered something Mrs. Blessington had said about spoiling men, and how easy it was to begin, and how selfish they grew.

"Come, Ernest, we have got no time to lose. And as to that horrid prejudice of yours, do try and get over it."

There came a temptation to the man—a temptation to carry out his own manly will; but a softer, tenderer feeling swept over him as a mental vision of the pretty, laughing face passed before him, and half an hour later he stood in full-dress waiting the advent of the beautiful girl, who, all unconsciously to them both, was steering her frail vessel on the quicksands of married misery.

A year passed and Mr. and Mrs. Redgrave were still in the vortex of fashionable life; but to the man's spirit it had grown unutterably wearisome.

"I married for a home, Grace," he said one day in gentle expostulation; "but what do I see of my home?"

"Quite enough to satisfy a reasonable man. Why, I shouldn't want to be alone with you all the time, Ernest. Think how dreadfully tired we should get of each other."

The thoughtless words stabbed like a knife, but he made them no reply. Only that evening for the first time, Mrs. Redgrave went to some gay assemblage alone. Mr. Redgrave had refused to accompany her.

"I am tired," he said; "but do not let me detain you. Mrs. Blessington is seen constantly without her husband."

"Because he is a bear," answered Grace, pouting.

Nevertheless, she went, and after that it was no uncommon thing for Ernest to spend his evenings with his books and thoughts, while his beautiful wife went out alone.

"Grace, I wish you to give Mrs. Blessington up, he said to her one evening, as they sat at dinner.

"Nonsense, Ernest. I cannot do it if I wished it ever so much."

"But you must do it. I will not have you go to that woman's house again."

"But, Ernest, I have already accepted an invitation to a dinner party there Thursday evening."

"Then write and decline. I do not ask you without good cause, little girl, but things have recently come to my hearing regarding this lady, and I do not wish my wife's name coupled with hers."

Grace made no reply, but in her own heart her decision was unaltered. Begin to yield to men's whims, and where would she end? Of course she should go. She had been married more than a year now, and so far, had had her own sweet will and way.

This time the latter was unexpectedly made easy for her; for as Ernest kissed her good-bye on Thursday morning he said to her:

"I shan't be home to dinner to-night, Grace. You had better dine at mother's. By the way, this was Mrs. Blessington's night. You have declined that invitation?"

The first fear that she ever felt of Ernest crept into her heart at a new, stern look she saw in his eyes, and it drew her first falsehood to him from her lips.

"Yes," she answered.

He stooped and kissed her more tenderly.

"I'll make it up to you, darling. Believe me, I did not ask it without good cause."

She stood quite still, after he had left her. She was half-tempted yet to obey him; but pshaw! What nonsense it was!

So, at seven o'clock, the carriage stood at her door, and, in a bewitching dinner dress, she was driven to the house her husband had forbidden her to enter.

But the dinner dragged—not but that Mrs. Blessington's chef had done himself infinite credit, or that her guests failed in their part. The trouble lay only with Mrs. Redgrave's self. In vain she strove to rally; compliments palled on her; the lights tired her. One thought weighed on her heart and brain.

Suppose Ernest should be seriously displeased? Well, what if he were? Mrs. Blessington had told her how she managed her husband's first displeasure.

"Never yield," she advised. "Never show that you're sorry, and you'll soon learn not to feel sorry."

So when, at 10 o'clock, she bade her hostess good night, she determined not to show that she felt any regret.

A light in the library told her that her husband was home. She hesitated an instant at the door, then went boldly in.

Ernest stood with his back to the fire, his eyes fixed upon her, but not her Ernest. The sternness had gone from his eyes, but no smile was on his lips. Over all his face was an expression of withering contempt.

"You have enjoyed your evening, madam," he said. "You had for it the relish of your falsehood this morning."

Oh, how wrong she had been! She was tempted to go to him and creep into his arms, and beg him to forgive her, but she remembered Mrs. Blessington's advice.

"Yes," she said, "I had a charming evening; but I am quite sleepy now. Good-night, I am going to bed."

She turned to leave the room; but in one stride he was beside her, and held her arm in a grip of steel.

"Coward, you hurt me!" she said, in sudden anger.

He dropped her arm then, as though she had stung him.

"You meant that word—you have ceased to love me! Why did you disobey me, Grace?"

"Because I do not choose to be a slave to your caprice—because I have had my own way all my life, and I intend to have it."

"And I say you shall not have it. Choose between Mrs. Blessington and me—between your unworthy friend and your husband—between your own will and your future happiness—on this instant, choose, choose!"

"I have made my choice; I abide by it. When you are more reasonable, I will listen further. Now, good-night."

"How hateful I was!" she said to herself.

"As if I would not give up fifty Mrs. Blessintongs for one Ernest. I will give her up, too, but I'll do it in my own way."

Once she unlocked the door to go down. But no—it would undo all that her firmness had accomplished. So the night passed to her a sleepless one.

In the early morning a servant brought her a note. It was from her husband and ran thus:

"At nine o'clock I start for India, to be absent six months. During that time my lawyer will consult you in regard to our separation, and make it as easy for you as possible. I have known for a long time that our tastes were diametrically opposed, and all my sweet hopes of home were wrecked, but not that you could defy, and outrage the love that I so freely gave you. Do not think me harsh in leaving you without a good-bye, but I thought it would be less painful to us both."

With tear-blinded eyes she glanced up at the clock. It was just eight. She had one hour in which to act. It was but the work of ten minutes to order the carriage, make a hasty toilet, swallow a cup of coffee, then issue her commands to the coachman to drive at any speed, but reach the terminus before the clock struck nine. One hour to undo what might be a life's fatal work!

But time waits for no man. It was ten minutes past the hour when the terminus was reached and already the train was speeding on its way.

With a low cry of agony Grace realized the whole; then the strain relaxed, and the fair young head fell back upon its silken cushions, in a dead faint.

"A lady fainted!" was the cry which reached a gentleman giving some directions about the luggage which he had countermanded being put in the mail train.

He turned quickly. There stood his own horses, his own carriage, and within it the lovely face of his unconscious wife.

It was the work of an instant to spring beside her and lift her on his breast, trying to revive her with his passionate kisses. At last the beautiful eyes opened with wild, incredulous recognition.

"Oh, I am dreaming," she murmured. "Ernest, don't leave me!"

"No, darling, no! At the last moment my heart relented. I thought perhaps I had misjudged you, or that I had been too severe, and I ordered my luggage to be taken out of the train, and let it start without me. My wife, I thought you did not love me—that you had chosen the world; because, my darling, no true woman finds it hard to obey the man whom she can respect and love; and surely, Grace, you do notfind me a tyrant."

And she can only sob out her plea for forgivness—a plea all too easy to grant; and even tears are sweet when kissed away by love's lips.

But Grace never forgot her lesson. Each year home grows sweeter, more precious, and some of the jostling outside world is shut away. But Grace misses nothing. She has found her world within her husband's heart, and knows that he is well content that she should nestle there.

SHE WOULD HAVE A SEAT.

Yesterday afternoon as a Ridge road car was coming up Lake avenue the driver stopped on being signaled by a young man on a crossing not far from Driving Park avenue. The young man was accompanied by a rather pretty young woman who was dressed in light, airy summer attire, and carried a fancy colored sun parasol. The young man jumped aboard the car first, and rushed inside, securing the only seat vacant, leaving the young woman to follow as best she could. Of course every one expected that he would give up his seat to his lady, but he did not do so, and she after standing a while, holding on to a strap, concluded to have a seat any way, and without a word of warning plumped down on the lap of her escort, saying as she did so: "I'm as tired as you are, darling, and you will have to hold me until I get a seat." He gave a grunt of the hog kind, and told her in plain English that "she could stand or sit on the floor for all he cared, but he wouldn't hold her."

At this several male occupants of the car offered their seats to the young woman, but she declined their offer and said: "He's as able to hold me now as he was before we were married, and I will sit where I am." The passengers were up to this time silently smothering their laughter, but the last was too much for them, and one remarked, "the car will be thrown from the track unless we stop laughing so hard." Realizing the fact that he was making a target of himself the young man rose hastily, nearly throwing his darling wife on the floor, and made a rush for the door, saying as he did so: "You take my seat; I'll walk home," and he left the car. The wife was not dismayed in the least, but sat there quietly enjoying the fun as well as did the passengers.—Rochester Democat.

NEXT DOOR TO IT.

"Well, what is it?" queried the Sergeant as a colored man stood before him, hat in hand, yesterday.

"I wants a pusson 'rested, sah."

"Who is it?"

"An incendiary, sah."

"An incendiary, eh. Did he set your house afire?"

"No, sah."

"Some one else's house or barn?"

"No, sah. He libs next doah, an' bekase I stopped de fam'ly from gettin' water at our penstock he's down on me. He gets out in de yard an' calls me a hog, and dares me ober de fence, an he's tole lots of folks dat he means to do me up."

"But he's no incendiary."

"Why?"

"An incendiary is a person who sets fire to a building. This is a case of threats."

"Ar' it? Well, it's next doah to bein' an incendiary, an' I want de law to step in an' stop it. If it doah' do it I shan't reconcile de consequences!"

"How?"

"How? Why, if he keeps on I shall designate myself to elevate ober dat fence some day an' percolate dat pusson wid a club until morality sots in! Ize a worm, sah, an' arter about so long de worm turns!"—Detroit Free Press.

"My friends," said the Fourth-of-July orator, "it is fitting that I should recall to your memories the great deeds of our forefathers on this occasion, but unfortunately I have brought along 'Smithers on Torts,' instead of an American history, as I intended. The audience will please sing 'The Star-Spangled Banner' while I gather some points on George Washington from the school teacher on my left."—Chicago News.

The Two Words.

One day a harsh word, rashly said,
Upon an evil journey sped,
And like a sharp and cruel dart
It pierced a fond and loving heart;
It turned a friend into a foe,
And everywhere brought pain and woe.

A kind word followed it one day,
Flew swiftly on its blessed way;
It healed the wound, it soothed the pain,
And friends of old were friends again;
It made the hate and anger cease,
And everywhere brought joy and peace.

But yet the harsh word left a trace
The kind word could not quite efface,
And though the heart its love regained,
It bore a scar that long remained;
Friends could forgive, but not forget,
Or lose the sense of keen regret.

Oh, if we could but learn to know
How swift and sure our words can go,
How we would weigh with utmost care
Each thought before it sought the air,
And only speak words that move
Like white-winged messages of love!

—J. E. Dickeana.

WORK FOR THE GIRLS.

The idea is to some extent prevalent that vigorous manual work is not conducive to the highest physical attractiveness in women. A recent lady writer takes the ground that the idea is a false one and that as a matter of fact work which necessitates active bodily exercise is the most potent of beautifiers. She says "it is work, duty, most musical of words, which perpetuates beauty. The shapeliest hands I ever saw, and the slenderest natural waists, belonged to two of the hardest working women, who had worked since childhood at common domestic duties. Comparing the trim graceful figures I have known among farmers' wives and busy housekeepers with the red faces and overblown busts of society women, whose tight corsets could not keep down their black satin waists, the advantage is clearly with the busy women after thirty. It is not the work that makes farming women ugly, but careless, unhealthy habits. Constant activity keeps down flesh, and tends to a lighter step than piano practice and driving to pay calls.

Let the girls do housework mornings, or work in the garden, and do not let them shirk the interest, the development, that lies in real work. They make such pitiable invalids, these exempt girls, who put forth as a plea of their feeble gentility that "they never had any hard work to do." Their poor health, their suspicions, coercive tempers, their inadequacy to any of the burdens of life which other people do not carry so willingly as did the fond mother—these are the retribution of the idle women.

A LOST ART FOUND.

"There is some unfermented wine," said a West street wine importer to a New York Mail writer, "that will keep as long as desired."

"Is there anything peculiar about the method of keeping it?"

"Oh yes. The pure juice of the grape is pressed into the bottle. Then some olive oil is poured in at the top of each bottle. This effectually excludes the air and none can work down into the wine to ferment it. At the same time any air that was in the juice finds its way up through the oil."

"Is this a new discovery?"

"Yes, it has been brought into use within a few years."

"But one would suppose the oil would flow into the glass when the bottle was put in use."

"That is prevented by sopping up the oil with cotton when the bottle is uncorked. The cotton absorbs it little by little. All that is needed is a little patience."

The reporter of the Mail and Express mentioned the matter to a doctor of divinity noted for his researches in ancient history and the manners and customs of nations.

"That is a real discovery," said he. That is one of the lost arts that Wendell Phillips did not mention in his celebrated lecture. This art of keeping unfermented wine was practiced by the Egyptians many years before Christ. But it was lost. It has now been re-discovered and is coming into general use."

THE BIGGEST CLOCK.

Philadelphia is coming to time and vice versa. The clock that is to be put into the tower of the public building at Philadelphia, is to be a great affair. The dial will be twenty-five feet in diameter and the center of the dial will be 361 feet above the street. The dial will be illuminated by electricity, and it is calculated that the time can be seen at night from any point in the city, and with a field-glass the position of the hands can be distinguished at a distance of fifteen miles. The minute hand of the clock will be twelve feet long; the hour hand will measure nine feet in length. A steam engine will be placed in the tower to wind the clock up every day. The clockmakers who have been invited to give their views concerning the building of the clock all say that nobody in this country is able to build such an enormous timepiece. It will take a whole year to place the clock machinery in the tower after the building has been completed. The bell for the clock is to weigh between 20,000 and 25,000 pounds, and will be calculated to peal out so loud that it can be heard in the distant parts of the city. There will be what are known as the Westminister chimes, and they will ring on the quarter, half, three-quarters and hour. The bell will be the next heaviest on the continent. The heaviest is in the cathedral at Montreal, and weighs 28,000.—Ladies' Home Journal.

IT MUST HAVE BEEN.—Miss Clara—I made such a stupid blunder to-day, Ethel.

Miss Ethel—Yes?

Miss Clara—Yes; I went into a drug store and told the young gentlemen behind the counter that I wanted a good sponge bath; I meant, of course, a good bath sponge. It was very annoying."—Stray.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, AUGUST 17, 1888.

MAJ. GEN. SCHOFIELD succeeds the late Gen. Sheridan in command of the army.

CONNECTICUT Republicans have nominated ex-Mayor Bulkley of Hartford for governor, and Gen. S. E. Merwin of New Haven for lieutenant governor.

YELLOW FEVER has appeared at Jacksonvile, Fla., and everybody who could has fled. Active efforts are being made to prevent a spread of the dread disease. There have been 28 cases and four deaths.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE in the territories has come to an end for the present, probably, the supreme court of Washington Territory having decided that it is unconstitutional. The matter will very likely be carried to the U. S. supreme court.

REFORM and Economy, Democratic watchwords in the last presidential campaign, are beautifully exemplified in the New York custom house, where 438 Republicans have been dismissed from the service by the Democratic collector, and 733 Democrats have been appointed in their places.

POLITICAL prognosticators are busying themselves in making up the cabinets of Mr. Cleveland and Gen. Harrison. It is a harmless sort of amusement, but it is well to remember the old adage about counting chickens before they are hatched; and neither candidate has told anybody yet who will go into his cabinet, if elected, depend upon it.

CONSIDERABLE comment is being made on the delay of President Cleveland in writing his letter of acceptance, and yet nobody suggests the dreadful thought that he may have it in mind to decline a reëlection. He is said to be waiting the completion of the Senate tariff bill, but if he delays much longer Gen. Harrison should set him a good example by publishing his acceptance first.

THERE is a great deal of solid truth put very neatly in the following paragraph by Burdette:—

> If the stern old Puritan Sabbath, with its subduing, saddening effects, wrought out such joyous natures as Beecher's and gave to the world such a beautiful blending of tenderness and strength, laughing and tears, heart-deep pathos and sunny humor as Oliver Wendell Holmes, let us have another century of Puritan Sabbaths. Up to date the Sunday of the beer garden has failed to bring forth a Holmes or a Beecher. It has evolved a Johann Most and August Spies, but somehow that sort of a product doesn't seem quite up to the old Puritan mark.

MR. BLAINE reached Augusta, Me., safely Tuesday evening, and was welcomed home with an enthusiasm which must have been very pleasant. His journey was a continuous ovation, even Massachusetts manifesting a warmth of feeling which seems somewhat incongruous in view of her past coldness toward the Maine statesman. But curiosity probably had quite as much to do in drawing the crowds together as admiration.

THE river and harbor bill has become a law without the president's signature. The bill is larger than it ever was before, appropriating some $22,000,000, but the president's courage was not equal to vetoing the whole measure because of the jobs in it, so he "let 'er slide," good and bad together. He can face the poor victims of his pension vetoes better than he could the many constituencies of voters who would be angered by the loss of the expected appropriation for their districts.

THE remains of Gen. Sheridan were laid at rest in the national cemetery at Arlington last Saturday with military honors. The funeral services were held in St. Matthew's church in Washington, Cardinal Gibbons pronouncing a fitting eulogy, and the body was then borne to the cemetery upon an artillery caisson, the general's horse, fully accoutred, being led behind. After the services of the church at the grave an artillery salute was fired, the bugler sounded "Taps," and the last sad rites were ended.

THE new American party has been in session at Washington this week, and had rather a "high-daddy" time for a party just setting up in business, about a quarter of the 126 delegates leaving the convention because the New York delegates were having their own way. James L. Curtis of New York was nominated for president and Judge J. N. Greer for vice president. The platform calls for the total abolition of the naturalization laws, and demands that no criminals, paupers or insane persons shall be allowed to immigrate.

GEN. VON MOLTKE has retired from the head of the German army. He is the greatest living general, but a military career of over seventy years fairly entitles him to whatever rest there may remain for him at the age of 88. His successor is Gen. Von Waldersee, who, as adjutant general, has been practically in command of the army for several years. His advancement is of interest to Americans, as he is the second husband of an American woman, Mary Lea, whose long-standing intimacy with the present empress is likely to make her the power behind the throne.

GEN. HARRISON'S speeches are so timely and sensible, and so varied, withal, that they possess the rare quality of reading well, as well as sounding well. On Tuesday a delegation of 3000 Republicans from a neighboring county called upon him, and in his talk to them he said:—

> Not long ago a distinguished Englishman and jurist visited our country. On the eve of his return, in a public address, he alluded to the fact that wherever he went he was asked if he was not amazed at the great size of our country. This student of law and government very kindly, but very decidedly, rebuked this too prevalent pride of bulk and called attention to the finer and higher things that he had observed in our American civilization. So, to-day, as I look into these intelligent faces, my thoughts are turned away from those things that are scheduled, that have their places upon our census returns, to those things which belong to the higher man, his spiritual and moral nature. I congratulate you, not so much upon the rich farm lands of your country as upon your virtues and happy homes. The home is the first school of citizenship. It is the great conservative and assimilating force. I should despair for my country if American citizens were to be trained only in our schools, valuable as their instruction is. It is in the home that we first learn obedience and respect for law. Parental authority is the type of beneficent government. It is in the home that we learn to love, in the mother that bore us, that which is virtuous, consecrated and pure. I take more pride in the fact that the Republican party has always been the friend and protector of the American home than in aught else. By the beneficent homestead law it created more than half a million homes. By the emancipation proclamation it converted a million cattle pens into homes. And it is still true to those principles that will preserve contentment and prosperity in our homes.

There will be no preaching at the Congregational church next Sunday.

Short flag staffs have been put up this week on the Cross and Commercial blocks, and a Democratic campaign flag is to be suspended between them, over Main street.

Sheriff Healey yesterday arrested Fred Regan, who was wanted by Worcester officers for a burglary committed there some five weeks ago, and turned him over to those officials.

Work has been commenced on a new iron bridge for the New London Northern Railroad over the Quaboag river at Holden's mill. The Vermont Construction Company is doing the work.

The peanut stand near the Nassowanno House has been painted, and it took three men a whole day to do it. Drinks were about as frequent as brushes of paint, and the job was necessarily a long one.

The Wright Wire Cloth Company has a patented steel fire escape ladder which they are manufacturing and placing on the market. A 50-foot ladder only weighs 30 pounds and costs $7, while it is so constructed that any one can operate it.

James G. Blaine passed through Palmer Monday afternoon on the 3.32 express for Boston. There were perhaps 100 at the station to see him, and he appeared on the platform of the car and lifted his hat in response to the cheers of the crowd.

The Eastern Hampden Medical Association held a basket picnic with Dr. Stowe at his camp on Thorndike street yesterday. Dr. J. W. Hannum of Ludlow presented an essay on "Oxygen," while Drs. Sawin of Brimfield, Fuller and Jackson of Monson also had short essays.

The Central street sewer is being extended north of Park street as far as the appropriation of $300 will carry it. On account of the large amount of other work on hand none of the contractors would bid on the job, so the selectmen were obliged to take it in hand themselves.

There is a possibility that the Boston & Albany Railroad company will be asked to pay $5000 for the death of George W. Aspinwall, killed at the west Tenneyville crossing not long ago, the claim being that Mr. Aspinwall met his death through the carelessness of the company in allowing sleepers to be piled beside the track to such a height that the approach of trains could not be seen.

A hearing was given the town's prosecuting committee at the selectmen's office Wednesday afternoon, relative to the revoking of certain common victualler licenses. The committee showed that the law was plainly evaded in many cases, while in some no pretense was made of keeping food, and they accordingly asked that such persons be deprived of their license. The selectmen reserved their decision.

F. A. Cotton of Auburndale is the new agent of the Adams Express Company, in place of H. W. Smith, resigned, and the office will be moved from Smith's store to the room formerly used as a fish market in Clark & Hastings's block, nearly opposite. The delivery team will be dispensed with, arrangements having been made with Truckman Brown to deliver all packages too large to be carried by hand.

"Huh-h-h, there!" Ole Crawford has a new horse which he thinks can trot right away from just about any other piece of horse-flesh in town. C. E. Fuller has had one or two brushes with him with his mare "Pede," and the two have agreed to try conclusions on the park some evening the first of next week. The race will be for fun, best two in three, half mile heats, and it is expected there will also be another race between other local horses.

It was only a mouse, just a common mouse, but it made lots of fun in the Congregational church last Sunday morning. It was first discovered by one good woman in her bustle. She shook the intruder out, and he proceeded to make the acquaintance of several ladies who didn't care about an introduction, and who acted—well, you know how they all act when there's a mouse about. Then he had a fine time all to himself on the pulpit stairs, while there was a part of the sermon which some of the congregation failed to hear.

A. S. Whitcomb, formerly of this place, died of heart disease at his home in Keene, N. H., Monday. Mr. Whitcomb was born in Marlboro, and for some years drove a six-horse stage from Keene to Hillsboro. He was then express agent at Keene, and afterward a postal clerk, following the former occupation nearly 20 years. For a long time he ran from Keene to Springfield, then from Palmer to Winchendon. He was for a while clerk in the post office here, but for the last two years has been unable to work on account of ill health. There are many friends in this place who will be pained to learn of his death.

Base Ball.

The Skull and Bones club went to North Wilbraham last Saturday for a game with the club there, but their opponents failed to materialize, and they came home without playing.

The Wide Awakes went to Monson last Saturday afternoon and defeated the Volunteers of that place 29 to 6, although they claim the latter were reinforced by four players of the first nine.

The Palmers were again victorious last Saturday, and defeated the Spencers 11 to 3.

To-morrow the Palmers play the Mutuals of Hartford on the home grounds, and there should be a good attendance at the game, as the Mutuals are a strong team, and will no doubt make the contest exciting. The games certainly should be better attended than they have been in the past.

Forest Lake Garden.

The storm last Sunday prevented any preaching services at Forest Lake, but Rev. Mr. Stevenson of Ware is expected to preach next Sunday at 3 p. m.

Last Saturday the Congregational Sunday-school of Thorndike passed a pleasant day at the Lake. There were foot races, boat races, etc., and all appeared to be having a pleasant time. To-day the Congregational church of Belchertown took a day's outing. The people from the cities begin to find the Lake a pleasant place at which to spend a vacation. The boarders at present are H. L. Gaylord, wife and son, and Mrs. George F. Miller and daughter of Springfield, F. A. Wyman, wife and son of Boston, and Mrs. F. R. Bennett and H. C. Bennett of Lunenburg. Charles Oliver and wife returned to Fitchburg last Tuesday after several weeks' outing. Mrs. E. R. Turner of Gardner spent a few days at the Lake the first of the week.

The managers served 30 dinners last Wednesday, which fact shows that a good many people will not carry a lunch basket when they find they can get a good hot dinner just as well.

Excursions.

Palmer people will have two opportunities to visit Boston next week at reduced rates. Tuesday an excursion will be run over the Ware River road from Barre Plains, the train leaving Palmer at 6.50 a. m. Wednesday there will be one over the Boston & Albany road, the train leaving here at 7.05. With each of these is an opportunity to visit Nantasket Beach or the cyclorama of the Battle of Bunker Hill. The train reaches Boston at 10.10 a. m., and does not return until 7.20 p. m., giving ample time for sight seeing. The last opportunity of the season for Palmer people will be August 28, when a similar excursion will be run.

Those who desire to visit Newport will have an opportunity next Wednesday, when the New London Northern Railroad will run an excursion from Palmer and way stations south to that famous place. The train leaves Palmer at 7.05 and Monson at 7.15, the round trip fare being placed at the low rate of $1.75. At New London excursionists will take the magnificent steamer City of Worcester, and have a pleasant three hours' sail on the water, arriving at Newport at 1 p. m. Ample time will be given to visit the old mill, beach, casino, hotels and other points of interest, as the boat will not return until 4 o'clock, connecting at New London with a special train. Music will be furnished by Tubbs's military band, and by an orchestra for dancing on the boat.

Strike at the Carpet Mill.

The weavers at the carpet mill went out on a strike last Saturday morning, and as a consequence the mill has been shut down ever since. The cause of the strike was the discharge of a "tramp" weaver named Broderick, whom the other weavers demanded should be taken back again, which the superintendent declined to do. It is claimed that for some time the weavers have disliked the man who run the "quiller," and have done all they could to annoy him. Saturday morning there was a scarcity of quills, and Broderick, who had three, went to the quiller and took ten or a dozen, a majority of the number there. He was spoken to by the superintendent about it and talked back considerably, whereupon he was told he could go. He went out, but afterward came back and succeeded in getting the rest of the weavers to strike. The weavers claim they had no quills when they came in that morning, and after waiting till there was enough to start on, Broderick, who had three in the first place, was told he could not start his loom, no reason being given. They then struck to have the discharged man taken back, and afterward made a condition that they should receive an increase in pay of ½ cent a yard—or from 5¼ to 5¾—on Brussels carpets, and a cent a yard—or from 10½ to 11½—on Wiltons, and declare they will not return to work until their demands are granted. On the other hand Mr. Dewey says the mill will never start up on these conditions. The discharged weaver was not doing first-class work at all times, and would have been let go soon anyway. As to an increase in pay, that is simply impossible. Trade is dull all through the country, and the mill has not been making any money lately, but the weavers have averaged more pay than at any other factory in the country, with the exception of one in Worcester. They have averaged $9 per week, while one man made $15 in five days. The company is not particularly anxious to start up with business in its present state through the country, and it remains to be seen whether the weavers will go back at the old prices or be idle indefinitely.

The Thorndikes will not have a game to-morrow, but will play the Three Rivers club the 25th, either at Three Rivers or on the home grounds.

Mrs. George Mooers entertained a party of fourteen young ladies at her residence Wednesday afternoon, and the affair was a most enjoyable one.

Michael Sears, living in the south part of Belchertown, had his leg broken last Friday while at work on the repairs on the Thorndike Company's canal.

The Congregational church picnic at Forest Lake Garden Saturday was largely attended, and those present enjoyed a pleasant time. The following is a brief list of the sports and winners of the same. The doubled-oared race was quite exciting, the entries being Greene and Thomas, Wheaton and Clark, Royce and Merrifield, and was won by Greene and Thomas; the single oar race rowed by Clark, Greene and Wheaton was won by Wheaton, Greene being a very close 2d; the 100-yard-dash was won by S. S. Greene; hop, step and jump, S. S. Greene; running broad jump, Levi Wheaton.

Thorndikes 9 North Brookfields 0.

The Thorndikes gave one of the best exhibitions of ball playing Saturday that has been seen on the home grounds for a long time, giving the visitors a shut-out. Riley and Roberts, the battery for the home team, worked like a charm, only two hits being made off Riley. The Thorndikes played a good game at the bat. For the visitors Lynch, Howard and Carter played well. Lyon's catch of a hot liner was the feature of the game. The score:

Two young men employed at Flynt's quarry thought excitement was rather dull in Monson, so proposed to indulge in a prize fight. The first battle was fought at North Monson a week ago Sunday, but resulted in anything but a satisfactory manner, and they agreed to fight it out on the following Sunday. A place was selected and a referee chosen, and the battle was begun only to be stopped by two officers, who arrested both parties and the referee. One of the principals made good his escape as he was left outside the officer's house, who had gone for a coat. Their cases come up before the district court tomorrow.

The place has been fitted up for the purpose, and he shows the finest and most complete stock of choice foreign and domestic fruit ever seen in Ware. He shows blue plums which weigh a little over three ounces and measure 6 by 7¼ inches in circumferance. He makes a specialty of California fruits.

I believe that foreigners who come to our country to make it their home—and the home of their children — should be put through such a course as to make them feel the value and importance of the boon conferred. The length of residence before acquiring full citizenship should be materially lengthened; the alien becoming a citizen should be able to show a good character, visible means of support, and should be able to speak, read and write the English language. But protection to home industries, which you put so strongly, I regard as the most important plank in any platform after "the Union must and shall be preserved."—General Grant in 1883.

A terrible ocean disaster occurred early Tuesday morning off Sable Island, when the steamer Geiser, from New York for Copenhagen, was run into by the Thingvalla of the same line, from Copenhagen for New York, in a heavy fog, and sunk with 105 of the passengers and crew. The fated boat went down within five minutes after being struck.

The great Leary raft of 22,000 forest trees has reached New York safely. The owner is said to have saved $23,000 in freight by this method of transportation.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, Aug. 15, 1888.

Adin Thayer's death left a remarkably large number of competent lawyers who are anxious for his position as judge of probate for Worcester county. Already there is beginning to be some feeling over the different men who are mentioned, and it seems as if Worcester county had an unusual facility in getting up objects of personal and political difference. Some of the applicants are thought by the friends of the others to be positively too old, and they should not think of going into the office when it is physically certain that they cannot occupy it only a few years at best. Such criticism is made of Messrs. Mason and Kent of Worcester. One of the men who has been mentioned, and in whose interest some action has been taken to-day by his friends, has considerable backing for the place, and from his record in public life thus far, there is no question but that he would make a model judge. I refer to ex-Senator W. T. Forbes of Westboro. He has already been judge of the local district court, and is now in the receipt of a good income from a business which he has built up by his ability and energy. Whether he would find the probate judgeship attractive I do not know, but it is certain that if the county secures his services it will get an honest, competent and faithful man.

Just at this turn in the state campaign it looks more as if Ames would be the gubernatorial nominee than Draper. Each party has doubtless done good work in the week past, and each has been credited with work which it has not done. For instance, "Bob" Nichols was reported from Greenfield as being there in the interest of Gen. Draper's candidacy. When he had traveled along to North Adams, the same report was received here by those who were on the lookout for adverse influence. By the time he had reached Pittsfield, it was said that he was traveling in the interest of Ames, and when the distinguished traveler came to Springfield the same report was sent out from there. Now the truth is that Nichols was traveling in the interest of neither candidate for the governorship. The Draper men say that they know nothing about his trip, and the Ames men had nothing to do with sending him out, and both seem to be honest in the denial. Very likely the fact is that "Bob" was out on his usual scouting expedition, looking up the senatorial field in the interest of his clients in his profession as lobbyist, and that he talked indifferently on the governorship in the different places as he happened to feel. But each side has had men traveling for it, and has kept up a vigorous correspondence in order to learn the real state of feeling among the voters of the state. Each side has found things to encourage it very much, and each gets hold of something the other would prefer it should not. But on the whole the drift this week has seemed to set toward Ames. The governor continues to gain health, and the task of the doctors now is to keep him from getting out too soon.

In the national campaign there is life shown all over the state, judging by the reports which come into the headquarters here. But more interest is manifested on the Republican side than on the Democratic. Until within a few days the Democrats seemed to be doing nothing, but now they are exerting themselves and are sending out the literature which they have received from the national committee, and are getting their machinery in order for their state convention. On Saturday of this week a meeting of their state committee will be held to fix the time and place of the state gathering. Very likely it will be in Worcester early in September, and from the last reports which were current at the headquarters, John E. Russell of Leicester stood the best chance of being the nominee, in the face of his refusing to run. They think that he would get many votes of the farmers, for he was popular with them when he was secretary of the state board of agriculture, and as he was in that office for seven years, he had ample opportunity to get many of them prejudiced in his favor. But I have an idea that few of them would follow Russell outside of the regular party lines. In the different parts of the state the Republicans are said to be throwing out campaign flags more freely than usual, and the Prohibitionists are also doing much in that style of campaigning.

More and more it looks as if this was to be a studying campaign, and as if people were not going to be in a hurry about deciding how they shall vote. Never have I known such a demand for documents as there is this year, and from my conversation with people I meet, I am inclined to believe that the people are reading the documents on both sides. Of course this is just the thing they ought to do in order to form an intelligent opinion of the issue, but after all it remains the truth that most of the men vote from their party predilections rather than from their understanding of the issues involved. They too often vote for the ticket because they are Republicans or Democrats, rather than because they are convinced apart from party considerations. A Democratic member of the Legislature from Worcester county, in here the other day, told of the growing intelligence of the laboring men on the tariff, and said that his town would give a larger Democratic majority than four years ago. This was because they had "read up," but who supposes that they have anything more than the most superficial idea of the problems involved? Precious few of us anyway can claim to have mastered the subject thoroughly. We shall stuff our heads with figures and arguments from now till November, and the outcome will be a strange mixture of intelligence and prejudice, with a good deal of active partisanship thrown in to color our decisions. But it is the only way we have of educating the people, and it is better than no way.

Speaking of campaign documents, more has been done the past week by the Democrats than by the Republicans. The latter have on hand at their headquarters their supplies from the Home Market Club, but the young men's Democratic club has blossomed out with an address and with several little flyers which they will circulate for effect upon the labor vote. Their address is an elaborate pamphlet, covering not only the ground of the tariff, but also the general principles of the Democratic party. It comes out especially strong for local self government, and attacks the Republicans for retaining the poll tax as a suffrage qualification and for the passage of the metropolitan police bill in 1885. The part of the address relating to the tariff will be reprinted as a separate document and distributed on a single sheet. Then they will have ready to-morrow a little sheet standing up for the Mills bill and showing the workingmen that under it they will have cheaper food, clothing, houses and other necessaries, and will have better employment.

One of the political features of the week which should not be overlooked is the decision of Speaker Noyes not to push his campaign for the governorship any further this year, but to be reëlected to the House and be speaker for another term. Doubtless he thinks his chances will be better next year.

BAY STATE FAIR.—The second fair of the Bay State Agricultural Society, which is to be held at Springfield Oct. 4th to 11th, will offer more attractions to the surrounding country than any exhibition of the kind ever attempted in this section. Hampden Park with its 60 acres will be placed at the disposal of the horses and cattle, the agricultural implements, dairy products and poultry, while three large buildings in the heart of the city will be required to display the domestic manufactures, flowers, fruit, vegetables and industrial exhibit. It is proposed to erect on the park a permanent stable with 20 box-stalls and four sheds 400 feet long and 30 wide, with a building for butter making. The entries for the animals should be made to the secretary, Winslow S. Lincoln of Worcester, by Wednesday, September 5th, and an entrance fee of $1 will be charged for each animal, except to members of the society, who pay $5 when they join. The entries for the other classes will be kept open till the day before the fair, the same entrance fee being required in most of them. Visitors will be admitted to the park from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m. and to the halls, which will be connected, from 9 a. m. to 10 p. m. Excursion trains will be run from all the adjoining towns and probably from Boston, so that Springfield expects to entertain more people than ever before in her history. The premiums will aggregate more than $10,000.

SLAUGHTER!

Is a very mild expression for the sacrifice in prices which S. H. Hellyar & Co. have just inaugurated. We find ourselves with $10,000 worth of goods more than we need, and more than we ought to have at this season of the year, and have accordingly made prices on some that cannot help but move it quickly. Men's Working Pants reduced to 75 cents. Our Boys' Suit department shows the greatest sacrifice in prices of any department in our store. $8 Suits reduced to $3. $5 Suits now $2. Sailor Suits, brown and blue, 62 cents. Boys' Short Pants from 25 cents upward. These are a sample of the low prices which we are now offering, and it will behoove all who desire to make a dollar without any exertion on their part to visit this great sale of Men's and Boys' Clothing.

The Great Secret

Of exceptionally long and abundant hair may never be solved; but that Ayer's Hair Vigor preserves the hair in all its beauty and luxuriance, and even restores it, when thin and gray, is

WELL KNOWN.

P. J. Cullen, Saratoga Springs, N. Y., writes: "My father, at the age of fifty, lost all the hair on the top of his head. After one month's trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor, the hair began coming, and, in three months, he had a fine growth of hair of the natural color."

J. T. Gibson, 96 Hope-st., Huntley, Staffordshire, Eng., writes "I have seen young men in South Australia quite gray, whose hair has been restored to its natural color after using but one bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor."

INHERITED DISEASES.

In the realm of disease the facts of inheritance are most numerous and are daily accumulating. Here, alas, they become terrible, fateful and overwhelming. No fact of nature is more pregnant with awful meaning than the fact of the inheritance of disease. It meets the physician on his daily rounds, paralyzing his art and filling him with dismay. The legend of the ancient Greeks picture the Furies as pursuing families from generation to generation, rendering them desolate. The Furies still apply their work of terror and death, but they are not now clothed in the garb of superstition, but appear in the more intelligible but no less awful form of hereditary disease.

Modern science, which has illuminated so many dark corners of nature, has shed a new light on the ominous word of the Scriptures, "The sins of the fathers shall be visited upon the children unto the third and fourth generation." Instances of hereditary disease abound. Fifty per cent of cases of consumption, that fearful destroyer of families, of cancer and scrofula, run in families through inhertance. Insanity is hereditary in a marked degree, but, fortunately, like many other hereditary diseases, tends to wear itself out, the stock becoming extinct. A distinguished scientist truly says: "No organ or texture of the body is exempt from the chance of being the subject of hereditary disease." Probably more chronic diseases, which permanently modify the structure and functions of the body, are more or less liable to be inherited. The important and far-reaching practical deductions from such facts—affecting so powerfully the happiness of individuals and families and the collective welfare of the nation—are obvious to reflecting minds, and the best means of preventing or curing these diseases is the subject of intense interest to all. Fortunately nature has provided a remedy, which experience has attested as infallible, and the remedy is the world's famous Swift's Specific, a pure vegetable compound — nature's antidote for all blood poisons. To the afflicted it is a blessing of inestimable value. An interesting treatise on "Blood and Skin Diseases," will be mailed free by addressing

Go West.

"To-day," said he, "I graduate.
What shall I do, will you advise?
Shall I stay here to try my fate,
Or seek the west, where fortune lies?

"It rests with you what I shall do;
Say but the word and I will stay.
But if you bid me go from you,
Again my heart must needs obey."

"I think," said she, "were you to go,
You'd find that plan by far the best,"
Then in his ear she whispered low;
"I'm very sure we'll like the west."

Three Summer Dangers.

Three summer dangers menace the household and traveler at every turn. They are climate, food and water. To guard against them requires judgment, abstinence, and SANFORD'S GINGER.

SANFORD'S GINGER, compounded of imported ginger, choice aromatics, and French brandy, convenient, speedy and safe, instantly relieves cramps and pains, speedily checks all forms of summer complaints, prevents indigestion, destroys disease germs in water drunk, restores the circulation and digestion when suspended by a chill,—a frequent cause of cholera morbus,—breaks up colds and fevers, and wards off malarial, contageous, and epidemic influences.

As a pure fruit stimulant for the aged, mentally and physically overworked, for delicate females, especially mothers, and as a means of reforming those addicted to an excessive use of alcoholic stimulants, it is invaluable.

Never travel without SANFORD'S GINGER.

Beware of worthless "gingers" offensively urged by mercenary druggists and dealers on those who call for and desire only

Sanford's Ginger,

THE DELICIOUS SUMMER MEDICINE.

Make Childhood Sweet.

Wait not till the little hands are at rest
  Ere you fill them full of flowers;
Wait not for the crowning tuberose
  To make sweet the last sad hours;
But while in the busy household band
Your darlings still need your guiding hand,
  Oh, fill their lives with sweetness.

Wait not till the little hearts are still
  For the loving look and phrase;
But while you gently chide a fault,
  The good deed kindly praise.
The word you would speak beside the bier
Falls sweeter far on the living ear;
  Oh, fill young lives with sweetness.

Ah! what are kisses on clay-cold lips
  To the rosy mouth we press,
When our wee one flies to her mother's arms
  For love's tenderest caress!
Let never a worldly babble keep
Your heart from the joy each day should reap,
  Circling young lives with sweetness.

Give thanks, each morn, for the sturdy boys,
  Give thanks for the fairy girls;
With a dower of wealth like this at home
  Would you rifle the earth for pearls?
Wait not for Death to gem Love's crown,
But daily shower life's blessings down,
  And fill young lives with sweetness.

Remember the homes where the light has fled,
  Where the rose has faded away;
And the love that glows in youthful hearts,
  Oh, cherish it while you may!
And make hour home a garden of flowers,
Where joy shall bloom through childhood's hours,
  And fill young lives with sweetness.

AT LAST.

"I suppose any one would take me for a regular tramp," murmured Gideon Holmes, as he turned aside from the dusty road, and seated himself under the shade of a great oak tree. "I look like one, goodness knows. Well, my tramping days are 'most over, I hope. Only two miles more to Newville, and my journey is done. I wonder if any of the old friends will know me. How good it will seem to take 'em by the hand after fifteen years' absence! There'll be changes; I must expect that. I'm changed myself. Battered and gray, I don't look nothin' like the feller I was when I enlisted. War was hard on men and country alike, but the men show it more'n the country. I wonder, now, what's become of Joe McMurtrie! Settled down, I expect, farmin' somewheres, an' married to that girl he set so much by. I can see him now, a-lookin' at her picter. She was pretty, there's no denying that."

Old Gideon was tired and hungry. He had walked all the way from North Carolina, where he had remained after being mustered out at the close of the war of the Rebellion. He had worked as a farm hand, but his wages were small, and he had never been able to save anything. So, when a great desire seized him to see again the hills and valleys of his native Pennsylvania, he had been obliged to make the journey on foot, and to beg his food at the different houses he passed. He had slept in barns, sheds, and under hay-stacks, and he had sometimes been rated soundly by the farmers' wives for leading such an idle life, for they regarded him as the worthless vagabond he appeared to be, and refused to belive the story he told.

But he was in Pennsylvania at last, and only ten miles from the little village where his youth and early manhood had been passed, and where his wife and children—who had died before the war—lay buried in the old, grass-grown churchyard.

"This bread is about as hard as bread can ever be," the old man muttered, as he opened his bundle and took out part of a loaf which a farmer's wife had given him the previous day. "I wonder if the folks in that house yonder would give me a cup of milk to soak it in."

The house at which his gaze was directed stood at some distance from the road. It was a two-story frame building, unpainted and weather-beaten. There were no shades at the windows, and all the panes in those of the upper story were broken out. Had it not been for the lowing of a cow in the shed, and the anxious clucking of half a dozen hens to their broods, old Gideon would have thought the place unoccupied.

Leaving his bundle under the tree he crossed the road, pushed open the little gate, and walked up to the front door, on either side of which roses and syringas were blooming luxuriantly.

He had to knock twice before there was any sound of life within. Then he heard the shuffle of a man's feet ever the bare floor, and at last the door was thrown open with a jerk.

"Will you let me have a"—began Gideon, and then broke off with a laugh that was almost a sob. "Joe! Joe McMurtrie!" he cried, holding out his brown and calloused hand, "don't you know me? Don't you know me, old comrade?"

The man in the doorway stared at him a minute, a puzzled expression on his face; then, with the effusion of a boy, threw both arms around Gideon's neck.

"Know you?" he repeated; "as if I could ever forget you, Gideon!"

He drew him into the house, and pushed forward a wooden chair.

"Sit down, comrade," he said, "and tell me how you came to find me out."

Gideon told his story as briefly as possible, dwelling very lightly on his misfortunes and troubles, and ended by saying that he had come back to Pennsylvania to end his days there.

"To end them with me, you mean," said Joe, with some emotion. "I haven't much Gideon, but you're welcome to share it. There's room enough here for both of us, and you won't go on to Newville with my consent. Life in the country will suit you better than life in the town, and all the old friends are dead, or have moved away."

"I'll stay with you, then," said Gideon, "and it's like you to make the offer, comrade. I'm good for many a day's work yet, and I won't be no burden on you. But how happens you're livin' alone, Joe? When you was mustered out, you said you was goin' home to be married."

Joe's face changed perceptibly.

"I was expectin' it," he said, slowly, "but when I got back I found my Alice was another man's wife. She'd got word that I was dead, and her folks—they lived in the valley just below here—had persuaded her into marryin' a man who was going out West to settle. He'd bought a big prairie farm, I believe, and was worth some money. I'd only time to see her once, and we neither of us said much. There wasn't no use in it, you see. And I didn't reproach her none for what she'd done. She wasn't to blame. She was always easy led, was Alice. Just before I said good-bye I told her I'd wait for her, for I knew we weren't goin' to be parted forever. I'm waitin' yet."

"You haven't seen her since?"

Joe shook his head.

"No, she hasn't been home. She's been out there eleven years now, and she's got six children,—so I heard. Her folks live near here, as I said, an' I bought this place on that account; but I don't see nothin' of 'em. I expect they feel kinder mean yet, 'bout the way they tormented poor Alice into marryin' that man.

"Your waitin' won't be of no use, Joe," said Gideon; "you'll never see her again."

Joe rose, and walking to the door, stood there a moment, looking out. Then he came back to his friend again.

"Something tells me that I will see her again, Gideon," he said. "It's that that gives me strength to wait for her. I know she'll come. Mine warn't no boy's love, you see. I was consid'ble over thirty when we was promised to each other. I'd never cared 'bout no one before that; and I never have since. I mean to wait, and she'll come some day, I known it."

The two men settled down very easily to life together. Joe exjoyed having a companion to whom he could talk freely, and the friends spent long hours in recalling to each other's memory incidents of the war, and reminiscences of bivouac and battles, campfire and weary march. They had borne muskets side by side for four long years, and the friendship formed then had never waned.

Gideon found plenty of work to do, and he frequently spent days at a time in the employ of Alice's father, old Mr. Harlan, who sent for him whenever extra help about the farm work was needed.

Gideon never returned from the Harlan farm without something to tell Joe of Alice, whose name he contrived to introduce into his conversation with Mrs. Harlan, who was always ready to talk on the subject of her absent daughter.

"She ain't happy out there, Joe," said old Gideon, one night. "Her husband drinks. Her mother heard it quite by accident."

There was no need to explain to Joe who was meant by "she." He understood at once that his friend referred to Alice.

"I wish she'd come back," said Joe. "But she'll think it her duty to stick by him, no matter what he does. Alice always had a tender heart, poor girl!"

Year after year went by. Joe's sixtieth birthday had passed. It was nearly twenty years since he and Gideon had been mustered out in North Carolina; nearly twenty-five since the day Alice Harlan had promised to be his wife. But he was faithful still. He still insisted he would see her before he died.

The terrible exposure and privation they had endured during the four years they had spent in the defense of their country's flag had had their natural effect on both the old comrades, and they had become deaf, and were crippled with rheumatism, and Joe suffered from some peculiar trouble of the heart, which the doctor he consulted could not relieve.

"But I'll live to see my Alice again," the old man said, hopefully. "I sha'n't die till I've looked once more in her sweet, fair face, dear child! I told her I'd wait, and I'll keep my word."

He did not realize that the years which had made an old man of him must have left their traces on Alice as well. He thought of her always as the fair, blue-eyed, golden-haired, laughing girl of twenty. It did not occur to him that she must have changed.

It was shortly after his sixtieth birthday had passed, that he sat one afternoon, feeling prostrated, in his tiny kitchen. On the fire was a pan of boiling milk, and he proposed making a dish that he knew his old comrade liked. He looked up with a smile as Gideon entered; but his face grew grave as soon as he saw the look in his friend's eyes.

"I've got news for you, Joe," said Gideon, in a voice that trembled in spite of his efforts to speak firmly. "Good news, dear comrade."

"It's about Alice," said Joe, dropping his knife and standing up.

"Yes, she's coming back,—coming at last," said Gideon. "She'll be here to-morrow. But she's weak and ill, Joe. And, Joe,"—

"Well?"

"Her husband's dead. He was thrown from a carriage three months ago, and instantly killed. It was a great shock to Alice, her mother said."

Joe stared a moment in his friend's face, as if only half understanding him. Then he went out, and Gideon saw him cross the field at the back of the house and go into the wood beyond.

"He wants to think it all over," muttered Gideon. "He can't believe his waiting is over."

It was nearly midnight when Joe came in, and then he lay down on his rude bunk without a word to his comrade, who was silent too.

With the dawn of day Joe was up, busy with hammer and nails about his house and fence.

"I want to make things look nice," he said to Gideon. I don't want Alice to see the place untidy. She's sure to want to look about and see how we've been livin'."

He rehung the gate, mended the fence, trained up the rose-bushes, and swept the yard at the back of the house. He went from one place of work to another with a nervous anxiety which betrayed how greatly the news of his old love's home-coming had moved him.

"I believe I'd go mad if I stopped work for even half an hour," he said with a nervous laugh, when Gideon called him to dinner at noon; "and I can't eat a morsel, comrade, don't ask me to try."

Just at nightfall he gathered a big bunch of syringas and roses, and, dressing himself in his best, started in the direction of the Harlan farm-house.

"You'd better wait until ro-morrow," said Gideon, hurrying after him. "You can't see her to-night."

"I've waited twenty years," was the answer. "I can't wait no longer,—not another hour. And I'll see her,—they can't refuse me."

He went on, a bright smile on his face, and old Gideon went back into the little house again, a strange dread knocking at at his heart.

When Joe reached the Harlan farmhouse he lingered a few moments in the moonlight, half afraid now to meet his old love again.

"I'm old and grizzled," he muttered, as he leaned on the gate and let his eyes rest on the house which held his all. "I wonder if she'll know me?"

He sighed, pushed open the gate, and went up the box-bordered path.

The door was not opened in answer to his knock; but a woman,—some one he had never seen before,—came around the side of the house.

"I—want to see—her," he said, hesitatingly, a choking sound in his voice.

The woman glanced at the flowers he carried, and seemed to understand him.

"You can go in," she said. "Go into the parlor,—she's there."

Then she went back to the rear of the house again, and Joe entered the hall and opened the parlor door. He wondered a little that she should be there, for, as in most country houses, the parlor was kept shut up, and used only on rare occasions. Joe had never been admitted to it in the days of his courting. He had told his love to Alice in the family living-room or out under the great locust trees that stood before the gate.

The parlor would have been in darkness now, had it not been for the moonlight that flooded in. Joe looked about him wonderingly, then his eyes fell upon something in the center of the room, and he staggered toward it with a hoarse cry, throwing out his arms like one drunk with despair.

Yes, Alice was there! But she was deaf to his cry of agony, blind to the hot, bitter tears which gathered in his eyes.

She had died on her journey home, and lay now in her coffin, the glory of the moonlight on her white, cold face, her thin hands, on the third finger of one of which her wedding ring hung loosely, crossed over her heart.

She looked old and worn; there were lines of care on her once smooth brow, and the hair which Joe had likened to sunshine in days past was thickly sprinkled with gray.

But the man who had loved her so long and faithfully did not notice the changes which the years had wrought. As he stood above her coffin his one thought was that he saw her again, that his long waiting was over, and that it had not been in vain. He had said that he would see her before he died, but he had not dreamed that it would be a cold, pulseless form that would return to his yearning arms, a face pallid with the hue of death that would meet his tender gaze. He had frequently contemplated his own decease, but it had never occurred to him that she could die.

When the woman who had met him outside opened the parlor door, an hour later, she found him sitting by the coffin, one arm thrown over it. His eyes were bent on the worn, white face before him, his hand still grasped the bunch of syringas and roses; but his great, loving heart had ceased to beat. He had joined his Alice in the shadow land.

ALL ABOUT FANS.

Ken Si was the first lady who carried a fan. She lived in ages which are past and for the most part forgotten, and she was the daughter of a Chinese mandarin. Who ever saw a mandarin, even on a tea chest, without his fan? In China and Japan to this day every body has a fan; and there are fans of all sorts for everybody. The Japanese waves his fan at you when he meets you by way of greeting, and the beggar who solicits for alms has the exceedingly small coin "made on purpose" for charity presented to him on the tip of the fan. In ancient times, among Greeks fans seem to have been enormous; they were generally made of feathers, and carried by slaves over the heads of their masters and mistresses, to protect them from the sun, or waved about before them to stir the air. Catherine de Medici carried the first folding fan ever carried in France; and in the time of Louis XIV., the fan was a gorgeous thing, often covered with jewels, and worth a small fortune.

In England they were the fashion in the time of Henry VII. A fan set in diamonds was once given to Queen Elizabeth upon a New Year's day. The Mexican colored fans which Cortez had from Montezuma were marvels of beauty; and in Spain a large black fan is the favorite. It is said that the use of a fan is as carefully taught in that country as any other branch of education, and that by the well-known code of signals a Spanish lady can carry on a long conversation with any one, especially an admirer. The Japanese criminal of rank is politely executed by means of a fan, which he must receive with a low bow, and as he bows, presto! the executioner draws his head off. In fact, there is a fan for every occasion in Japan.—Dry Goods Chronicle.

"How doth the little busy bee!" Well, if you meddle with him you will be apt to find out how much he doth.—Boston Post.

A Disastrous Ride.

Some little drops of water,
  Whose home was in the sea,
To go upon a journey
  Once happened to agree.

A cloud they had for carriage,
  They drove a playful breeze,
And over town and country
  They rode along at ease.

But, oh! there were so many,
  At last the carriage broke,
And to the ground came tumbling
  These frightened little folk.

And through the moss and grasses,
  They were compelled to roam,
Until a brooklet found them
  And carried them all home.

AZTEC MUMMIES.

Sig. S. Marghieri, the well-known archæologist, discovered and explored a hermetically sealed cave, at an elevation of nearly 4000 feet on the eastern side of the Sierra Madre mountains in Mexico, about 200 miles south of Deming, between Coralitos and Casa Grande, about two years ago. The floor was nearly smooth, the sides rough and rugged, and the vault covered with stalactites. In the far end of the cavern were found four desiccated human bodies.

The bodies were in a sitting posture, with the hands crossed on the breast and the knees approaching the chin, with the head inclined forward. They were carefully shrouded in their burial garments and placed facing the rising sun. The male and female were seated side by side. The elder child, a boy, was seated at the right of the father, and the younger child, a girl, left of the mother. In addition to the funeral shrouds the little girl was enveloped in the skin of an animal, similar to the method used in the island of Fuerte Ventura, the better to preserve its tender frame.

The floor of the cavern and the remains were covered with a fine dust, but no footprints of man or beast could be found. The bodies were carried to San Francisco by Signor Marghieri, and were purchased by J. Z. Davis, president of the board of trustees of the State Mining Bureau, and by him presented to the bureau.

No embalming process was used in the preservation of these bodies. They were dried by the air alone. The bodies are not like those of the Indians of the present day, because the fingers and hands and feet are smaller than the average, and the woman's hair is brown and silken and of the Caucasian type. The body of the man must have weighed in life from 180 to 200 pounds, but it weighs now only 14 pounds, while the body of the woman weighs only 12 pounds. In the lobe of each of the small and well-proportioned ears is a piece of hollow bamboo or reed as an ornament. The woman had a large forehead and well-developed reasoning powers.

The little boy weighs but three pounds and the girl only four and a half pounds.

The burial shrouds on the bodies are composed chiefly of cotton, hair, hide, grasses and the bark of willows.

The bodies may be seen at the rooms of the State Mining Bureau.—San Francisco Examiner.

A CURIOUS GIFT.

The man is still living who 17 years ago walked into the rooms of the Bible Society in Boston and electrified the persons whom he found there, first by his appearance, and secondly by the communication which he had to make. His appearance betokened more than poverty, for his shabby clothes were tied together with strings. What in the world had brought such a man there, was a question every one asked himself, and the wonder can be better imagined than described when the stranger remarked that he had property to the amount of $75,000, which he would like to turn over to the society if he could be guaranteed ten per cent annually upon it for the remainder of his life, his age then 79. The officers suppressed their amazement as well as they could, took his name, verified his schedule of possessions, and submitted the case to the directors.

They looked the matter over in the light of the actuaries' tables, etc., and, finally, after much deliberation, decided that the risk was too great, and so notified the would-be donor. Not long after he came back and renewed his proposition to turn the money over the society, and said that he would be content with seven per cent annually. The proposition was accepted, and for some years he appeared regularly at the expiration of the year and drew his interest, taking $200 in cash and the company's note for the balance. After doing this for seven years or so he turned those notes back to the company, saying that he had no further use for them. He is now, at the age of ninety-six, blind, deaf and crippled by a fall so that he cannot walk, and the Bible Society pays the bills for his support.

A Sixteenth-street boy's uncle is very close, but he is a great admirer of his nephew. "Tommy," he said to him yesterday, "what would you do if I were to give you a nickel?" "How much?" asked Tommy, as if to make assurance doubly sure. "A whole nickel," said the uncle. "Well," replied the boy, after thinking a moment, "I ain't sure, but I believe I'd give it to your suffering family." Tommy got a quarter.—Washington Critic.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, AUGUST 24, 1888.

After the Maine election is over Mr. Blaine will make a stumping tour of the country, perhaps going as far as California.

It is announced with some show of seriousness that the greenbackers are to meet next month to nominate presidential candidates and "keep before the people the great principles on which the party was originally founded." There won't be much "enthoose" over that corpse.

Now a big Republican reception to Chauncey M Depew, upon his return from Europe, is in the wind. It is earnestly to be hoped that every prominent Republican returning from a foreign land will not insist upon being processioned, feted and Blained as soon as he touches his native soil.

Gen. Butler will come out of his seclusion, it is said, and make a few campaign addresses, having already been invited to speak to the workingmen. He will advocate protection, but has not unfolded his purposes as to candidates. If he takes hold with his customary vim he will add materially to the interest of the campaign.

Another ocean horror quickly follows last week's disaster on the Atlantic. The steam coast steamer City of Chester was run into and sunk in San Francisco bay during a fog Tuesday forenoon, near the Golden Gate, by the steamer Oceanic from Hong Kong, and was so nearly cut in two that she sank in about five minutes, carrying thirty-three souls to a watery grave. Both steamers were blowing their whistles, but it is said the signals were not understood by the Oceanic. The Geiser collision last week appears to have resulted from criminal carelessness, as there was no fog, as reported at first. An investigation is to held.

Gen. Harrison is taking a fortnights' vacation on a Lake Erie island. He has made enough speeches and shaken hands enough since the Chicago convention to tire a man of iron, and has earned a good outing. It is no small task for a man to go through a campaign as the presidential candidate of a great party. The demands upon his time and strength are endless and exhaustive, and he needs to exercise the greatest care to avoid breaking down. In the present campaign President Cleveland has the advantage of his competitor, for he is not troubled by visiting delegations and has only to attend to his usual duties, depending mainly for success upon the record he has made in office.

By a strict party vote the Senate has rejected the fisheries treaty, greatly to the disappointment of the Canadians, whose views were pretty well embodied in its provisions. Yesterday President Cleveland sent a message to Congress asking for power to retaliate in a most effective manner, by denying Canada the privilege of landing goods at our ports to be transported in bond free of duty across this country to Canada. As our ports are used for this purpose during the half year the St. Lawrence is closed by ice, it would pinch the Canadians sharply to have to pay duty on the goods so transported, but it would give them a lively apreciation of the feelings of our fishermen, who are denied the privilege of transporting their fish in bond across the Canadian soil.

Judge Thurman has started out on a little stumping tour in Michigan this week, and has been received everywhere with much enthusiasm. He has made several speeches at different points, and the "old Roman" does not hesitate to proclaim free trade pretty broadly. He is so well pleased with his definition of what a tariff is that he gives it in every speech, after this fashion:—"It is a tax that takes hold of everything from the crown of your head to the soles of your feet; that taxes your hat, your coats, your vests, your breeches, your boots, your shoes; that taxes every implement which you use in your agricultural and machanical operations. And now to tell me that to take a laboring man and to tax him from the top of his head to the soles of his feet, to tax him on everything that he uses in his trade, and to tax him heavily, is a benefit to him, seems to me to be nothing else than absurdity." This of course means that all these taxes should come off. Judge Thurman is more candid than the majority of his party.

Now that Col. Walker has openly avowed his candidacy for the congressional nomination, the opposition to him in his own county is becoming pronounced. It is alleged that he is far from the kind of a man wanted to represent this district. He has no business interests here, and nothing to identify him with its people save that he owns a place in Belchertown, which he occupies a few months of the year, the rest of the time being spent at his New York city residence. He has fellowship in a swell club and is in fact a New York club man with no employment but to kill time. Is such a man a fit representative of the manufacturers, yeomanry and hard workers that compose 99-100 of the voters of this district?—Greenfield Gazette.

The Tobique River, near Andover, N. B., was the scene of a cruel and cowardly murder last Sunday, the wife of Maj. Howes of Philadelphia being shot by parties in ambush on the shore. The major, his wife, four children and three Indian guides were sailing down the river, when several shots were fired at them, probably in retaliation for the major's ordering some men off the private fishing grounds. Three men have been arrested on suspicion. Mrs. Howes was a daughterof Gen. Luke Lyman of Northampton.

They may not literally race, but each will make a strong effort to get across the water in the quickest time.

Plans for the Annual Fair.

Arrangements for the annual exhibition of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society have been in progress for some time, and the board of directors meet this afternoon to perfect plans and arrange the program for the fair, which will be held on Tuesday and Wednesday, September 11 and 12. The society has made a steady improvement in the line of attractions from year to year, and last season's exhibition was generally considered superior to any yet held, but there is still a chance to give the people a better thing for their money, and the society is striving diligently for that purpose. The trotting this fall promises to be far more exciting than usual, as some good purses are offered which the owners of fast steeds will work hard to secure. There will no doubt be more entries in the 2.30 class than has been the case heretofore, as there are several speedy animals owned hereabouts that will make an excellent showing. The exhibition in the hall can hardly fail of being above the average, as the crops are looking finely, much better than last year.

The Strike at the Carpet Mill.

The strike of the weavers employed by the Palmer Carpet Company remains unsettled, and the indications are that matters will not be adjusted for some time. There have been no developments this week other than the statements as to the situation, by President Dewey and the striking operatives. The latter assert that when the present management assumed control, the weavers were receiving 5¾ cents per yard for their labor, and were immediately cut down to 5¼ cents, as the result of business depression. The other operatives also had their wages reduced about 12 per cent, which naturally caused some dissatisfaction, but the weavers were given to understand that when business was better they would again receive the old price, and they are of the opinion that an increase should now be made, as they claim that business has greatly improved. The strike was practically caused, they say, by the employment of a boy who did not understand running the filling machine, and as a result the weavers were obliged to lose much time for want of quills for their looms, thus preventing them from earning anything like living wages. They further state that they have not averaged $6 per week, due in a measure to the fact that they have not been allowed to work the full number of hours. The reason that the weavers ceased work for a half hour before the strike, they say, was to give the boy a chance to get a good supply of quills on hand. During this cessation the superintendent interviewed Weaver Broderick, and, finding three unused quills in his box, he at once gave him a "ticket of leave." The weavers then struck, demanding the restoration of Broderick, who did not have enough quills on hand to run his loom over fifteen minutes, anyhow, and they also asked the management to pay them the old prices again. The weavers assert that Broderick cannot very well be called a "tramp," inasmuch as the management sent to the carpet mill at Thompsonville and engaged him to come here to work. The operatives further claim that the Hartford Carpet Company pay one-half cent more, and Philadelphia and Worcester establishments pay six cents a yard. In Lowell and Clinton the rate is less because women are employed, who are not compelled to repair and keep their looms in order. They are of the opinion that the sympathy of the business men and others is with them, while on the other hand President Dewey claims it is all with him, and says that all the statements made by the operatives are not reliable, and that they have been very troublesome since he took charge of the mill. As regards the wages, he says weavers averaged $9.16 a week during the month of July, and that he has given them employment and kept the mill in operation at a loss. He regards the account in the last issue of the Journal as a correct statement of the situation. Broderick will not be reinstated under any consideration, he says, as he was inefficient. He believes that the weavers troubled the boy on the filling machine so that he could not do his work properly, for quantities of half-used quills were seen lying under the looms, where they had been thrown, though the weavers claim they were not in any condition to use. He will not yield to the demand of the strikers, but was intending to raise the wages of all the help as soon as business would warrant it. He hopes to start the machinery again Monday morning, as there are a number of the weavers, he says, who express a willingness to resume, but this statement the strikers discredit, and say all will remain out until they get the increase. A well-attended meeting of the strikers was held in Hibernian hall Wednesday evening to discuss the situation. Each operative expressed his views of the matter, and all agreed that even if they had averaged $9.16 a week, it was an exceedingly low average, and was not sufficient to procure for them the necessaries of life. Two weavers came to town Wednesday in search of work, but as soon as it was learned that a labor grievance was pending they boarded the first outgoing train.

In last week's issue of the Journal it was stated that the Wide Awakes defeated the Volunteers 29 to 6. The score is correct, but is in favor of the latter club. The Wide Awakes would have been shut out completely were it not for the fielding errors of the Volunteers, as the former club only succeeded in getting three balls to the outfield during the entire game.

Lindley & Company, who have successfully operated the North Monson mill for the past three years, will shut down Sept. 1, at which time their additional lease of three months shall have expired. About 100 hands will therefore be thrown out of employment. The company's reason for discontinuing the business is that the owners will not make necessary repairs. Thus business at North Monson will almost entirely be suspended as it is not probable the mill will be run by other parties at present.

The special town meeting held in the town hall Saturday afternoon called out a goodly number of voters. R. M. Reynolds was chosen moderator. The sewerage question was the business of the meeting. The selectmen have received numerous complaints of the stench caused by individuals emtying their sewage into the natural water course of the town, and to put in a system of sewerage in the town, which would be useless without a water system, at the cost of several thousand dollars, was not deemed advisable by the selectmen, as the nuisance is caused directly by individuals who have no right to empty their sewage into the streams belonging to the town. All the articles in the warrant were passed over after a great deal of discussion and considerable heated arguments, with some strong personalites were indulged in. The selectmen as the board of health, are given full power to abate this trouble, which has been of long standing and it is to be hoped will be done away with at once. There will undoubtedly be considerable feeling in the matter, as one of the parties concerned says he will not take up this nuisance, and will take his case into the courts for decision. There is no reason why the town should be made to suffer and put out money for the neglect and indifferance of private individuals.

A soldier candidate is in the field for the office of governor in this commonwealth, and the question is being asked, "What are his qualifications for the position?" A simple statement of the facts in the life of Gen. Draper is deemed by his friends a sufficient answer to the inquiry. In the first place, they believe it is fully time that Massachusetts recognized her soldiers by placing one of them in the gubernatorial office. Every New England state save Massachusetts has honored her veterans by making the most conspicuous of them governors of the commonwealth. Vermont, with scarcely an exception since the war, has filled her gubernatorial office with a veteran soldier. Farther West the same spirit has prevailed. The great state of Pennsylvania has had but one governor for a quarter of a century who did not serve in the Union armies. For many years the Republican party has said to the veterans of the commonwealth, "When you put forth a competent man for the position, we will make him governor " The veterans have been in no haste to press their claim, but they feel that the right man has now appeared. A product of the best New England life, Gen. Draper stands to-day as a representative, able and honored, of the industries of the commonwealth, the principles of the Republican party, and all the spirit of loyalty and devotion and sacrifice which was manifested by the veteran of the war. He is 46 years of age. He received his education in the public schools and in an academy. While yet a boy he entered a cotton mill as an operative in order to learn the business, where he continued for three years. When the rebellion broke out at the age of 19 he was found on the first wave of loyal enthusiasm, enlisting as a private to serve his country. He entered the 25th Massachusetts regiment. His promotion was rapid, all the promotion he got being well earned through his conspicuous qualities as a soldier. Passing through each grade as non-commissioned officer, he was made second lieutenant and soon after first lieutenant. His comrades in the 25th regiment testify to his efficiency and high standing as an officer in that command.

By reason of his special fitness while serving in North Carolina, he was made a signal officer, but his mettle and pluck was shown when, as his regiment went into battle and he was unemployed, Lieut. Draper reported to the captain of his company, fought through the action with conspicuous daring, and then returned to his signal post. Gov. Andrew discerned the merit of Lieut. Draper and gave him a captain's commission in the 36th regiment. In this new position he so distinguished himself that he was soon made major. It was not long before he was lieutenant colonel of the 36th and soon after took command of the regiment. In every position he showed himself a brave and competent leader of men, cool, kind and masterful. The stories told of his services at the front all redound to his honor as a soldier and officer. He was but a boy, yet his noble conduct placed him in the foremost of the volunteer officers of his native state. He was always foremost in the fight, and when he was shot in the battle of the Wilderness he fell eight or ten paces in advance of his line. His skill and coolness in that battle counted much in holding the Union line firm at that point. The soldier who helped bear him from the field informs the writer that he never witnessed greater fortitude than was shown by this terribly wounded officer. As soon as possible he was again at the head of his regiment, and for some time commanded a brigade. For gallant and meritorious services on the battle field he was breveted brigadier general of volunteers. At every engagement in which his regiment participated Gen. Draper was noted for his bravery. Through his splendid qualities as a man and fighter he was in command of a brigade in the Union army before he was 22 years of age. His record entitles him to stand as a representative veteran of Massachusetts. As a business man he is prominently identified with the great industries of the land. The large establishment of which he is head is well known to every cotton manufacturer in the country. When the war ceased Gen. Draper entered this establishment and has there received his training for the management of the great industries with which he is identified. He is connected officially with a score of manufacturing industries.

As a candidate for the Republican nomination as governor of the commonwealth, Gen. Draper is considered by a large number of Republicans all through the state as more than worthy. He has always been a staunch Republican, devoted to the system of protecting American manufactures, and like his father is an able exponent of the doctrine of protection. A practical friend to the workingman, he believes in securing to him all his rights. In all his relations of life he has shown himself to be a liberal, whole-souled man.

His ability is unquestioned, and his experience has been of just that character to fit him for the performance of his duties as a practical governor. He was an active member of the staff of Gov. Long, and was chairman of the committee on resolutions at the state convention, where he made a most favorable impression. Those who know him socially and in business life are his enthusiastic admirers, and the number seems to be rapidly increasing who believe he will be the next governor of Massachusetts.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, Aug. 22, 1888.

Almost any kind of political information can be served up to-day on the very best authority to suit the desires of any reader. Is one's sympathy with the Republicans? I have been talking this afternoon with a Boston merchant who has just returned from a business trip to Ohio. It is his honest belief that Harrison will be elected. He was in Cleveland and listened to the public speaking in the open square on different nights by orators of the different parties. He observed that the Republican assertions that the success of the Democratic ticket meant that the workingmen would loose their employment and would be subjected to great suffering were believed by the crowd, and that it was no uncommon thing for some man to say that he had always voted the Democratic ticket, but this year he would vote with the Republicans. The tariff he found to be the chief issue of the campaign and with it the Republicans are sure to get many votes which they never had before.

On the other hand, if one wants reliable testimony to show that Cleveland is sure to be elected, it is easily to be had. Men here who are much interested, and are on the lookout for any stampede of the labor vote to the Republicans, say that they can discover no signs of such a movement. The "free trade scare," they say, will not work in this state; the workingmen are too intelligent and they see that their interest lies in reduction of taxes on the necessaries of life; men always vote with their pocket every time. So it goes. Each side is confident and each side has reasons which seem to it to be sufficient. All is, that somebody will be terribly disappointed when the returns come in, unless the thing goes one way or the other with a rush before November.

Both parties agree in this,—that the vote of the laboring class, so-called, is to decide the issue. All the literature of this campaign is written with that end in view. Everything is for the sake of proving to the workingmen that they will suffer severely by the reduction of the tariff, or that they will be great gainers by material lowering of the duties. The whole campaign seems to be turning upon the economic question whether a tariff has any influence or not upon the wages of a country. That is the economic question, apart from any application to our present campaign. Disinterested seekers for light will doubtless find this question discussed in economic writers before this campaign came on and they probably can find more light there than they can in present documents which are written with the purpose of prejudicing the people one way or the other and do not go into the matter unbiased, with a sincere desire to learn the truth, no matter whether it results for or against them. There is a great abundance of stuff to read, but the reader wants to get both sides if he expects to give to each a fair show. Neither statement of the other's position can be relied upon.

At the several political headquarters there is much work done. The Republicans send out their documents through the Home Market Club and so there is not so much of that to be seen with them as there is through the young Democrats, who seem to be doing most of that work for the Democratic party. The Massachusetts Tariff Reform League continues to send out great quantities of matter, but the young Democrats, who send out from 12,000 to 15,000 documents a day, now exceed them. The record of the Home Market Club is upward of 25,000 documents daily. Almost every one of these is on the tariff or some phase of the discussion of the tariff or wages. Each party is doing much with brief handbills which aim to present the case in a nutshell so that the voter can grasp it at a glance. They are political tracts, brought down to the comprehension of any one who ought to be entitled to vote, and they enable any voter to learn in a very few minutes the leading principle of each side.

It is said by those who have come in contact with the workingmen that they are remarkably well posted on the current arguments of each side of the discussion. They seem to have kept up with the times and the speakers find them a more intelligent audience than they had expected. In this state there does not seem to be much movement from either side to the other, compared with four years ago. A small proportion of the Mugwumps will vote for Harrison, for they always were protectionists, but there is no material shifting of sides or breaking up of the old lines. The changes, if they are to come largely anywhere, must come in some other state than ours.

In state politics it looks more than ever as if Gov. Ames would be given another term. I do not find that the Draper men are making formidable headway in their attempt to get control of the state convention. It is expected that they will make a strong effort to secure the delegates in the Lawrence caucuses, which are to be held on Friday night, In Lowell, Brockton, Boston and Taunton they are also expected to make a fair showing. But their support in other parts of the state is said to be small. They are still hopeful of getting the nomination and are very busy at work. The report that they had carried the city of Woburn seems to have been premature, but they will doubtless get many scattering delegates all through the state. Noyes is now out of the fight by his own volition and what strength he had is disposed to go to Ames. But he never had enough to do him any good and it can be of no great benefit to the governor.

The Democrats have postponed to Monday, September 3, their ratification meeting. They have arranged to have Congressman Mills, the father of the Mills bill, present and also Speaker Carlisle. These two will make a strong attraction and will do something to compensate for the postponement of the ratification from Aug. 23, the date for which it was originally fixed. Though their state convention is to be held in Springfield as soon as Sept. 5th, yet they seem to be all at sea regarding their gubernatorial candidate. Party leaders have their preference, but there has been no general union upon any one so that it can be said that he is sure of the nomination.

The terrific rain of last night proved a serious inconvenience and loss to many people. Some of the cellars on Washington street, including the basement of the Journal building, were badly filled with water. Boilers having been made utterly useless so that machinery has been stopped, printing presses have been delayed and elevators have been forced to remain idle. The downpour was tremendous about midnight and to-day all the stones of the street look as if they had been bleached.

The theatres are open for the new season, but the attractions are of the second class with which managers always open their houses. The stars do not come on the stage till later in the year, but those who have their reputations to make must come when they get a chance or not at all. Later, when the stars are on the stage of the city, they can be gathering in the shekels in the smaller places.

Business men say that trade is good, better than they would expect in a presidential year.

About An Important Newspaper.

(From the New York Sun.)

To the Editor of the Sun:—Will you please inform me if the Boston Herald is a Democratic paper?

D. O. C.

The Herald is one of the greatest journals of the country. No other paper is ahead of it in the vital faculty of news. No other paper is ahead of it in the power of intellectual comment and discussion. In principle, it is Democratic and Republican, like the constitution of the United States. But it is independent, not partisan, supporting and advocating the men and measures of one or another party as they commend themselves to its patriotic judgment.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., June 27, 1888.—Swift's Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga., Gentlemen: In the early part of the present year, a bad case of blood poisoning appeared upon me. I began taking S. S. S. under advice of another, and to-day I feel greatly improved. I am still taking the medicine and shall continue to do so until I am perfectly well. I believe it will effect a perfect cure.

Yours truly,
DOC. P. HOWARD,
111 West Sixth St.

COLUMBIA, S. C., July 7, 1888.—The Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga., Gentlemen: I was a great sufferer from muscular rheumatism for two years. I could get no permanent relief from any medicine prescribed by my physician. I took over a dozen bottles of your S. S. S., and now am as well as I ever was in my life. I am sure your medicine cured me, and I would recommend it to any one suffering from any blood disease.

Yours truly,
O. E. HUGHES,
Conductor C. & G. R. R.

WACO, TEXAS, May 9, 1888.—Gentleman: The wife of one of my customers was terribly afflicted with a loathsome skin disease, that covered her whole body. She was confined to her bed several years by this affliction and could not sleep from a violent itching and stinging of the skin. The disease baffled the skill of the physicians who treated it. Her husband finally began giving his wife Swift's Specific, and she commenced to improve almost immediately, and within a few weeks she was apparently well. She is now a hearty, fine-looking lady, with no trace of the affliction left.

Yours very truly,

"A Girl of the Period."

She fixes her hair in an exquisite way,
  With the bang all in fluff little curls;
  Her teeth are like pearls,
  And very few girls
Have smiles so attractively gay.
She's got too much sweetness to say,
  And piles on the taffy so strong;
That you wish her in further cathay
  Or some place where—angels—belong.

If her comrade be only a man,
  She loves to stroll out for a walk;
  She'll cheerfully talk
  About fossils, or chalk,
Or tell how creation began.
She'll bother you all that she can,
  She'll pall on you after a while;
Though her waist is not more than a span,
  She isn't exactly your style.

She might be a dear little thing
  With lovable manners and mild;
  Perhaps as a child
  She was giddy and wild,
And lead-able-round-with-a-string.
Undoubtedly youth had its fling,
  And buried it ages ago;
But the charms that we love in a maiden took wing
When she changed herself into that meaningless thing,
  "A girl of the Period," you know.

AMONG THE PARAGAPHERS.

WHAT MADE HER MAD.

He stooped and kissed her hand. Why
Should he not?
The moon was in eclipse
Behind a cloud. That was all right.
But he forgot
That maidens all have lips.

"This isn't as good as yours, and I brought twice as much to make up for it."—Hingham Journal.

PAPER UNDERWEAR.

Paper fabric will actually take the place of genuine cloth to some extent in the forthcoming summer toilets. In a modification of what used to be called Fedora front, to be worn by fashionable girls, the chemisette, or at least a portion of it disclosed between the front edges of the jacket, is composed of paper, stamped and cut in imitation of lace and embroidery. This innovation was premeditated to the extent that an order was sent to China more than a year ago for the manufacture of the stuff in the fibrous sort of paper produced only in that country. Thus it is that the masculine example of paper collars and cuffs has been followed, in an idealized manner, by a feminine acceptance of paper chemisettes. The paper looks exactly like soft, unlaundered linen, and is quite tough enough, it is well to say, to prevent easy accidents in the way of rent. Patterns are ingenious imitations, not only of plain, fine muslin, but of lace. This is timely because there is a tendency to use lace more generously with demi-toilets for the afternoon.

That Tired Feeling

Is experienced by almost every one in warm weather, and many people resort to Hood's Sarsaparilla to drive away the languor and exhaustion. The blood, laden with impurities which have been accumulating for months, moves sluggishly through the veins, the mind fails to think quickly, and the body is still slower to respond. Hood's Sarsaparilla is just what is needed. It purifies, vitalizes, and enriches the blood, makes the head clear, creates an appetite, overcomes that tired feeling, tones the nervous system, and imparts new strength and vigor to the whole body.

"I was all run down and unfit for business. I was induced to take a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and it built me right up so that I was soon able to resume work. I recommend it to all who are afflicted." D. W. BRATE, stone-cutter, No. 4 Martin St., Albany, N. Y.

Three Summer Dangers.

Three summer dangers menace the household and traveler at every turn. They are climate, food and water. To guard against them requires judgment, abstinence, and SANFORD'S GINGER.

SANFORD'S GINGER, compounded of imported ginger, choice aromatics, and French brandy, convenient, speedy and safe, instantly relieves cramps and pains, speedily checks all forms of summer complaints, prevents indigestion, destroys disease germs in water drunk, restores the circulation and digestion when suspended by a chill,—a frequent cause of cholera morbus,—breaks up colds and fevers, and wards off malarial, contageous, and epidemic influences.

As a pure fruit stimulant for the aged, mentally and physically overworked, for delicate females, especially mothers, and as a means of reforming those addicted to an excessive use of alcoholic stimulants, it is invaluable.

Never travel without SANFORD'S GINGER.

Beware of worthless "gingers" offensively urged by mercenary druggists and dealers on those who call for and desire only

Sanford's Ginger,

Finding Fault.

In speaking of a person's faults,
Pray don't forget your own;
Remember those with homes of glass
Should seldom throw a stone;
If we have nothing else to do
Than to talk of those that sin,
'Tis better to commence at home,
And from that point begin.

We have no right to judge a man
Until he's fairly tried,
Should we not like his company
We know the world is wide;
Some may have faults, and who has not,
The old as well as young?
Perhaps we may, for all we know,
Have fifty to their one.

I'll tell you of a better plan
And find it works full well,
To find you own defects to cure,
Ere other's faults you tell.
And though I sometimes hope to be
No worse than some I know,
My own short comings bid me let
The faults of others go.

Now let us all when we begin
To slander friend or foe,
Think of the harm one word may do
To those we little know.
Remember, curses, chicken-like,
Sometimes to roost come home.
Don't speak of other's faults until
You have none of your own.

LITTLE NONENTITY.

"Did you look over the list of arrivals this morning, Algernon?" Mrs. Elting inquired, languidly, as her handsome son lounged into her sitting room at a fashionable hotel at Long Branch.

"Yes, and walked down to the station," said Algernon, pulling his blonde moustache, as he admired his faultless morning costume before his mother's mirror.

"And Miss Nelson has not come?"

"No; I am quite sure of that. By the way, mother, who is the little party in gray who has taken that pretty cottage we thought of taking?"

"Some little nonentity," was the contemptuous reply; "the sick girl is a milliner. I have bought hats myself of her at Madam Dessie's. I knew her in a moment. So they can't be anybody. The old lady wears a cotton lace shawl, so you may know what she is'

"But the little one is a beauty. Her face is as exquisite as a miniature painting."

"Now, Algernon, for pity's sake don't go mixing yourself up wiih a lot of milliner's girls, just when it is so important for you to please Miss Nelson. Nearly four hundred thousand, and no one to control her in any way. And we are nearly at the end of our resources."

"Don't worry, mother, I'll look out for the heiress. Where's Aleck?"

"I'm sure I don't know. I don't see what you asked him to come here for. You know how popular he is, if he is as poor as a church mouse. Suppose Miss Nelson—"

"Don't fret about that, mammy. Aleck is a good fellow, I know; but he hasn't one particle of style. Can't tie a neck ribbon fashionable to save his life—don't give his mind to it at all. Now, I imagine Miss Nelson, with her fortune and position, wants a fellow to help her spend her money in proper shape, one who understands society and dress; one, in short—"

"Like Elgernon Elting," smiled Mrs. Elting. "I agree with you. Still she may be blue or charitable you know, so you had better keep Aleck in the back-ground. I am never comfortable with Aleck, if he is your father's nephew. I never know exactly where his dreadful sarcasms will cut next."

And where was Aleck? Dressed in a loose-fitting gray suit and broad straw hat, Dr. Alexander Carle had strolled out upon the beach, determined to enjoy as much as possible the brief holiday he had stolen from a hard-working professional life. He had not anticipated any call of duty, but answered promptly when a terrified servant girl, rushing up to him, gasped:—

"Oh, please sir, can you tell me where to find a doctor?"

"I am a doctor," he replied.

"Will you please come quick, sir. We're afraid she is dying."

He followed the hasty footsteps to a small cottage, where, in a lower room, he found a young girl fainting from hemorrhage, with an old lady supporting her head, and a slender little lady of twenty-two or three, applying restoratives.

For some moments no thought was given to anything but the suffer, but when she was resting, the danger over for a moment, Dr. Carle could not but note the beauty of the face Algernon had described as "exquisite as a miniature painting."

The dress of the three ladies was of the plainest description, although the cottage was handsomely furnished, and the old lady's words:—

"She has killed herself working in that dreadful milliner store," gave the young physician the impression that poverty pressed closely upon the sufferer. He motioned to the young lady as he left the room to follow him.

"You know," he said gently, "that you—" and he hesitated.

"My cousin, Miss Stafford," she said promptly.

"Is very ill."

"I know," was the reply, in a low voice. "We have been told there is no hope of her recovery. But she craved the sea air, and we brought her here. Her mother, as you see, is very bitter because her only child has been injured by overwork in a close, hot room. But it is too late to mend that. We want to smooth the way now, if we can."

"Yes—yes, I hope you will call upon me if I can be of service. I am but idling here, so my time is not valuable."

"That may be—but—"

Then she hesitated, lifting a pair of large, soft brown eyes full to Aleck's face, as if questioning it. Something in the respectful sympathy, the earnest kindness there pleased her, for she held out her hands, frankly, saying:—

"Thank you. I will send for you if we need advice."

Leaving some simple directions, the doctor took his leave, and the lady returned to the sick room.

"Auntie," she said, gently "the doctor has given me a broad hint that we may call upon him freely without dreading a heavy bill."

"Yes, now, when we do not need help it will come. Too late—too late!" the mother moaned, looking at the pale, wasted face upon the pillows.

"It was kind though," was the quiet reply, and the little woman went to the bedside to watch.

Dr. Carle called the next day and the next, to inquire for Miss Stafford, and to look into the brown eyes of Miss Nellie, her nurse. Always he saw the same routine, luxuries even heaped up for the invalid, the plainest attire for the mother and cousin. Always he found Nellie at the bedside, or when the invalid could drive out in the carriage with her, attentive to every want, careful to avoid all harmful exertion or excitement. And every day the brown eyes, meeting his so truthfully and frankly, became dearer to him.

He would linger and talk for an hour at the time, won by the low, silvery voice that revealed a pure heart and a cultivated mind. Sometimes, when the dying girl was strong enough, they had music in the cottage, Nellie's voice, pure and sweet, winning its way to that shrine in the young doctor's heart never before opened to woman's charms.

And in these weeks of quiet happiness for Aleck, of placid rest and preparation for Heaven for the invalid, of subdued grief soothed by Nellie's thoughtful love for the mother, Mrs. Elting was fretting and chafing over the unaccountable absence of Miss Nelson. Mrs. Hartrand, Miss Nelson's most intimate friend in New York, had assured Mrs. Elting, that Miss Nelson, after three years spent in European travel, had said she was going to Long Branch for the summer, and Mrs. Hartland had not heard of any change of plan. She would be at Long Branch herself about the middle of Auguest, and in the meantime, Mrs. Elting was forced to wait with what patience she could muster, and grimly imagine the winter's horrors of economy after the summer's extravagance, if, after all, Algenon failed to win the heiress.

Dr. Carle had listened gravely and respectfully to his aunt's assurance that the Staffords were quite beneath the notice of a gentleman.

"The girl is a milliner. I have seen her selling bouquets myself, and I understand the mother took in plain sewing at home."

"And the niece?"

"That little nonentity! Any body can see that she is a nobody. Why, her dresses half the time are shilling calicoes and cheap woolen stuff. I wonder that you will associate with them, Aleck?"

"They are ladies, auntie, and if their purses are slim, my own is not too well filled. But apart from that, I visit the cottage professionally."

"That is the worst of being a doctor! One has to associate with all sorts of low people!"

A little amused smile was the only answer to this, and the lecture was wasted, if intended to prevent the doctor's visits to Mrs. Stafford's cottage.

He was in love. He saw Nellie in every phase of her home life, and loved her in each and all. He had seen her in the kitchen making delicacies for Mamy, fast fading now; he had seen her at her post of tender, faithful nurse, night and day, soothing the dark way Mamy was entering, with every loving care; he had seen her gentle, graceful and ladylike in the little parlor, showing in every word and action the high bred ease of perfect refinement, and yet he was not afraid, when one day he dared his fate, to ask her to share his life of poverty, and the privations of a young doctor with a limited practice.

"I am getting on," he said, proudly, when she gave him the right to consider her welfare in his future schemes, "and practice will come. I will not ask you to share my burdens yet, love, but in a little while I hope to make a home for you."

"In a little while," she said, softly, "I will come to your home. But I cannot leave Mamy yet."

"Nor would I ask it."

"Auntie will go to her brother in the West. She is not my own aunt, but my uncle's wife, but I am very fond of her, and of poor Mamy."

Being betrothed, Aleck insisted upon sharing more of Nellie's cares and duties, and together comforted the stricken mother, together attended the funeral to New York.

Then Mrs. Stafford left for her Western home, and Nellie returned to the cottage, explaining that a friend was already there.

Mrs. Elting, in the meantime, was delighted at receiving a letter from Mrs. Hartland, announcing her speedy arrival at Long Branch, to meet her young friend Miss Nelson.

"Algernon," she said, excitedly, as her son entered the room soon after the arrival of the morning mail, "Mrs. Hartland is here!"

"At the hotel?"

"No, my dear, her note is dated from the little cottage the Staffords left last week. I suppose she would be horrified if she knew there had been a trio of milliners and seamstresses there before her. But she is there, and I have a note inviting me this evening. Now, Algernon dear, do be your usual fascinating self. You must not let that chance slip."

"No, I won't. Funny about that little milliner, was it not? Aleck declares she is perfection! She was certainly a beauty if she did wear print dresses and white aprons."

"I could not see her beauty! Algernon, be sure you don't mention her. Aleck attempted to introduce them one day when I met them on the beach, but I put that down at once, and she only blushed and walked on, as if accustomed to being snubbed. The idea of a milliner on my visiting list. Even if Aleck marries her, the position of a physician's wife will be far above her present one."

Never was Mrs. Elting more gracious, never was Algernon more fascinating, than when they sat in Mrs. Hartland's parlor, awaiting the arrival of Miss Nelson, who was, that lady informed them, taking a moonlight stroll with a friend.

Mrs. Elting strongly objected to the stroll, unless Algernon could occupy the position of "friend," but smiled sweetly, and made some remark about youthful romance.

Presently a little, black robed figure flitted up the stairs, followed by a tall, manly one, and there entered in the blaze of the gaslight, that little nonentity, the milliner's cousin, and Dr. Carle. Mrs. Elton's lips curled, but came down in a long line a moment later, as Miss Hartrand said:

"Why, Nell, child, how late you are. Mrs. Elting, my friend, Miss Nelson. Mr. Algernon Elting, Miss Nelson."

"Miss Nelson!" murmured Aleck, stupified as the others; "is not your name Stafford?"

"No, you called me so, and I let it pass, for Mr. Stafford was my mother's brother, and I did not want Miss Nelson's friends flooding here to disturb poor Mamy. I came here only for her sake at first, afterwards," she blushed, and her eyes dropped, "I staid for my own."

"Masquerading?" asked Mrs. Hartrand? "I wondered how you could be so near Mrs. Elting and not see her for she wrote me positively you were not at Long Branch."

"I have seen Mrs. Elting. Her reception of me was unfortunately shadowed by the dresses I selected as most appropriate for my duties in a sick room."

"Do not be angry, Aleck. I did not intend to deceive any body, but I wanted only to comfort poor auntie and Mamy. Uncle died while I was in Europe, and I never knew how poor auntie was until I came home, and found poor Mamy dying. I brought her here for rest and quiet, and when you came I did not think much of your calling me Miss Stafford, for you soon learned to call me Nellie. Then when you gave me your love, it was delicious to know it was not the heiress, Helen Nelson, you were wooing but just Nellie, the milliner's cousin, your aunt Elting's little nonentity."

"Who told you that?"

"A bird. Do you forgive me, Aleck?,'

What Aleck said need not be recorded, but at the wedding, in October, the bride's trousseau contained no calico dresses, and the beautiful bride in honiton lace and white satin, gave no one the idea of insignificance in her dainty, refined beauty and grace.

And Mrs. Elting, utterly ruined, has opened a milliner's store.

MEDICINAL VALUE OF LEMONS.

"While you are giving people simple rules for preserving their health, why don't you tell them about the use of lemons?" an intelligent professional man asked me the other day. He went on to say he had long been troubled with an inactive liver, which gave him a world of pain and trouble, until recently he was advised by a friend to take a glass of hot water, with the juice of half a lemon squeezed into it, but no sugar, night and morning, and see what the effect would be. He tried it, and found himself better almost immediately. His daily headaches, which medicine had failed to cure, left him, his appetite improved, and he gained several pounds in weight within a few weeks. After a while he omitted the drink, either at night or in the morning, and now at times does without either of them. "I am satisfied from experiment," said he, "that there is no better medicine for persons who are troubled with bilious or liver complaints than the simple remedy I have given, which is far more efficient than quinine or any other drug, while it is devoid of their injurious consequences. It excites the liver, stipulates the digestive organs and tones up the system generally. It is not unpleasant to take either; indeed, one gets to liking it."—Chicago Journal.

"Efrahem, cum to your mudder, boy, Whar you bin!"

Angry Words.

Angry words are lightly spoken
In a rash and thoughtless hour
Brightest links of life are broken
By their deep, insidious power;
Heart's inspired by warmest feeling,
Ne'er before by anger stirred,
Oft are rent past human healing
By a single angry word.

Love is much too pure and holy,
Friendship is too sacred, far,
For a moment's reckless folly
Thus to desolate and mar.
Angry words are lightly spoken,
Bitterest thoughts are rashly stirred,
Brightest links of life are broken
By a single angry word.

THE RIGHTS OF OTHERS.

The person of even average moral sense, says a writer in Daughters of America, has a good understanding of the fact that his neighbor's house, trees and material goods are objects toward which he should show respect by the simple process of letting alone. The right to alter the color of his house, to order the pruning of his trees, etc., are recognized to be matters solely under control of their owner.

But in matters less material, yet more personal, there is a great lack of respect shown in our dealings with one another.

Persons who would resent being called discourteous, persons who in the main are kind of heart and even generous with their money, are sadly wanting in charitable judgment of their neighbor's opinions and a proper sense of their peculiarities.

Too commonly the fact is ignored that a man's opinions and convictions are his private personal matter, with which no one else has a right to meddle.

A man may hold with all the fervor of heart and strength of mind of which he is capable the principles of Protestantism, but that is no reason why he should assail the belief of his Catholic neighbor. Indeed, it is an excellent reason why he should not do so, but, instead, should extend the toleration supposed to be a part of his religion.

A man may believe in homœopathy to the highest dilution, but that belief does not entitle him to the privilege of calling his neighbor to account because he chooses to seek relief by means of mercury and quinine in as heroic doses as he may fancy.

So in politics, the spending of money, in social life, in dress and education, each one should scrupulously avoid acting as censor of others who may differ from himself.

Least of all is one privileged while a guest to attack the opinion of the family whose hospitality he enjoys. When, for any reason, he cannot acquiesce in the family regulations let him depart, and not try to reform the family to his standard of propriety.

By calm, personal arguments or by the force of example, one may try to convince another that his way is the better, but a true courtesy requires that he shall not unasked present his opinions where to do so would wound and not alter in the slightest degree the course of his opponent.

Nor let any one flatter himself that because a man is loud of voice and blunt of speech, ever ready with cruel judgment of others and free with advice on all matters, that he will pleasantly accept such treatment from others, for he is quite as likely to resent interference with his affairs as the man with gentler speech and greater charity.

It is so easy to form the habit of meddlesomeness, and to persuade one's self into the belief that one's mission is to be a "private investigator and public advisor," that one is apt to forget that in the regulation of one's own conduct life presents enough perplexing problems without trespassing upon the rights of others in a mistaken zeal to convert them in a better way.

In short, let no one be so intent upon the mote in the eye of his neighbor that he will forget the beam in his own.

A MARVEL IN DANCES.

A traveler gives a pretty description of the graceful egg dance which was performed for his amusement in the court of Bhopal, India. It shows us that our sword dancers and our young ladies of the ballet are not quite up to the standard of the Bhopal girl. He tells us that a slender girl, arrayed in an embroidered bodice and short skirts like those worn by the present women in this part of India, came forward very fascinatingly to him with wreathed smiles and dainty steps, and also in steps that were very sweetly modeled.

She seemed to me as if she wanted me to buy her basket of eggs along with herself, and the eggs were real eggs. She did not dance on them, however. She wore on her head a large wheel of wicker-work, and around that at equal distances were placed threads with slip knots at the ends, in each knot a glass bead to keep it from closing. The music begins. It is a quick, jerking movement, rather monotonous, and the dancer spins round in time with the measure, which grows faster and faster.

As she turns she seizes an egg from the basket which is held on her left arm, and rapidly inserts it in one of the knots. Her circular motion causes the threads to stretch out like the spoke of a wheel. She keeps on doing this until her head is surrounded by a sort of aureole. When she has succeeded in placing all the eggs, she spins around so fast that her features can hardly be seen. A false step and Humpty Dumpty would have a fall indeed. She has now the most dainty and difficult part of her dance to execute, for the dance is not done till every egg is taken from its thread and laid safely back in the empty basket. One by one the Indian girl accomplishes this, never crushing a shell or displacing a single egg. When all are restored she stops her dizzy whirl, courtesies with grace, and offers her basket to the lookers on, who often break the eggs to prove that no juggler's trick has been used to change them.

HINTS ABOUT THE HOUSE.

It does not profit much to make a fortune if the maker goes to the asylum.

Ammonia and water is recommended as a wash for marble, instead of soap suds.

Young veal may be told by the bone in the cutlet. If it is very small the veal is not good.

Papered walls are cleaned by being wiped down with a flannel cloth tied over a broom or brush.

A wineglass of strong borax water in a pint of raw starch will make collars and cuffs stiff and glossy.

Try keeping all fruit in a covered chest or trunk down cellar, if you have no enclosed cubbard there.

Wrap glass jars of fruit in newspapers and put them away in a dark cool place. It prevents the fruit from bleaching.

A little borax put in the water in which scarlet napkins and red bordered towels are to be washed will prevent them from fading.

The flames from kerosene cannot be extinguished with water, but flour thrown profusely on them will smother them, or a large woolen rug or shawl will stifle them.

Equal parts of ammonia and turpentine will take paint out of clothing, no matter how dry or hard it may be. Saturate the spot two or three times, then wash out in soap suds.

Clean oil cloth with a wet towel pinned over a stiff broom, and rub with long, sweeping strokes. Matting should be washed with strong salt water and a clean cloth, and do it if possible at midday to insure quick drying, which prevents discoloration.

To brighten Brussels, or any carpet that is faded, sponge in a mixture of one part ox gall to two parts water. This is excellent. A lady recently bought a much faded carpet (Brussels) at a second-hand store, and restored it to almost its original beauty in this way.

A London magazine says: "Where the flavor of olives is not at first appreciated it is best to soak them over night in fresh water, and then place them in vinegar. An excellent pickle is thus made, and those eating them in this way soon learn to like them without this preparation." The same writer holds that for garnishing meats olives are not excelled by any vegetable.

SHE WAS EQUAL TO THE OCCASION.

It was a haughty eastern lady who had but dimly heard of this turbulent town, where people light their cigars with dynamite and you shoot a waiter for bringing you a potato that's only half boiled. She did not know what language we talked, but she had no manner of doubt that we had never heard of French. There was a San Franciscan lady with her little child down on a visit, and the three foregathered. One night the eastern lady was watching the San Franciscan mother putting her little four-years-old to bed, with the usual formulæ.

"Ah," said the eastern lady, "of course you haven't got so far in these matters as we have."

"What do you mean?"

"My children have all been taught to say their prayers in French."

The Calafornia mother blushed. She had to confess with shame that her child could only speak to God in English. But the little four-years-old was listening. she got up in bed and put her little hands together:—

"Mon Dieu. Bon jour. Comment vous portez vous? Amen."—San Francisco Chronicle.

"Yes," she said, "the waves in a storm remind me of our hired girl at home." "Hired girls, madam?" "Yes, they are such awful breakers."—Ocean.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, AUGUST 31, 1888.

POLITICAL conventions take note: Wisconsin Republicans used only about 200 words in constructing their platform. Go and do likewise.

YELLOW FEVER is spreading at Jacksonville, and a permament check is hardly looked for now until frost appears.

NEW YORK Republicans have nominated Warner Miller for governor, and Col. S. V. R. Cruger of New York for lieutenant governor.

NEGRO uprisings are now in order in the Southern states, as the election draws near. It is a significant fact that it is always the negro who gets killed in these "uprisings."

GEORGE M. STEARNS is coming home from Europe next week, and 'tis said he will take an active part in the campaign. If so he will be in lively demand, for there isn't a more "taking" speaker in the Democratic camp.

THE Springfield Union is engaged in a crusade against the foolish habit women have of kissing each other. Go in, brother, and may success crown your efforts, for there never was a more atrocious waste of sweetness.

GEN. BUTLER is to speak in Boston tonight on the tariff and fisheries questions. The names of L. N. Gilbert and E. H. Baker of Ware and J. S. Holden of Palmer appear among the signers of the letter requesting him to speak on these subjects.

GOV. HILL of New York would "rather have the support of the saloons than of the churches." That is a pretty good issue for the Republicans to meet him on, and if decent Democrats can sail under such a banner they are to be pitied.

THE contest in the 10th congressional district is so close and sharp between Messrs. Bates and Walker that it will not be strange if each succeeds in killing off the other, necessitating the nomination of somebody else if any sort of harmony is to prevail.

JAMES BREED, assistant cashier of the Hartford National Bank, committed suicide Wednesday morning by cutting his throat. Speculation and defalcation are the two words that tell the story. In this case the bank funds do not seem to have been disturbed, but he used some $20,000 of trust funds, and preferred death to disgrace.

THESE are words of truth and soberness which the New York Mail and Express addresses to its religious readers who propose to help the Democrats by voting for the candidate of the Prohibitory party for president:—"The Repulican party has not always come up to your standard, but it has done, and is doing, more for the home and for the cause than any other party that ever existed, and it is to-day the most powerful agency of reform in this country."

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND has subscribed $10,000 to the Democratic campaign fund, and the New York World pertinently asks: "Why should not every federal office-holder contribute to the campaign fund as well as the president? Let us have no hypocrisy." At the time of the Charleston earthquake the president subscribed the munificent sum of $25 for the sufferers, but, "Cleveland and Reform" fetches him to the tune of 20 per cent of his salary. Actions speak louder than words, and Democratic officials will take the hint and come down liberally for Reform.

WORKERS for Gov. Ames are around the state throwing out contemptible insinuations as to the revelations they will be forced to make concerning Gen. Draper's ideas on temperance, if he really persists in venturing to oppose Oliver Ames's desired renomination. Well, out with it then, and let's know the worst. The Boston Advertiser says on this subject: "Gen. Draper last year, as chairman of the resolutions committee, wrote and reported in the state convention one of the strongest temperance planks the party has ever adopted, and on that question when inaugurated would speak out in no equivocal way."

AN appeal signed by a number of veterans of the war is published this week in behalf of Gen. Draper's candidacy for the governorship. The signers want to make this a soldiers' campaign, and they say:—

> The Republican party of Massachusetts has not since the war nominated an ex-soldier for the position of governor. In this she stands alone among the New England states. This year we shall present the name of a well-known soldier, of recognized ability and fitness, having an honorable military record. We feel that he is deserving the support of all Republicans, and especially do we ask for the earnest support of those members of the Republican party who fought with him in order that there might be such a party in Massachusetts to-day.

The appeal will strike a responsive chord in many hearts, and is one the voters of the state will honor themselves in heeding.

TEMPERANCE Republicans are called upon by an address signed by Congressman Long and others to attend the caucuses and look sharply after the choice of delegates, that candidates for the Legislature may be nominated who are known to be right upon the liquor question, and who will vote to submit the prohibitory amendment to the people. The address closes with these words:—

> It seems to us that at a time so important to the cause as this, with our aims so nearly gained, all temperance men, without regard to past affiliations, ought to support the Republican party, especially as the liquor dealers and their friends are supporting its opponent, the Democratic party. There should now be no division of the temperance forces, and all temperance men who intend to vote the Republican ticket will be entitled to a vote in the Republican caucuses. With union and work success is easily within our grasp. Let us stand together and triumph.

Holden and Jerry Horan.

There are several articles of importance in the warrant for the town meeting next Tuesday, which ought to call out a good attendance. The question of a sewer from North Main street to the river is one of prime importance. Something of the kind is an absolute necessity. A sewer has been needed for a long time in that part of the village, but while other sections have been looked after to a greater or less extent, nothing has been done there. The delay ought not to continue longer. The matter of instituting some plan of improving the cemeteries in town is also one upon which favorable action should be taken.

State Primary School Notes.

The school will not observe Labor Day.

Some of the buildings have been repainted this week.

The sanitary condition of the institution is at present excellent.

There are now 316 inmates at the institution, 84 of that number being females.

The talk of lighting the institution by electricity ought to result in adopting the new system.

Rev. F. W. Betts of the Universalist church will address the children in the chapel Sunday morning.

All the schools are now in session, and in some instances the pupils have made marked progress in their studies.

The institution has usually been represented by an able base ball team, but this season's record is not an enviable one.

The work of filling the large silo has begun, and the average height of corn is estimated at from 12 to 17 feet, and a remarkably heavy crop at that.

District Court.

Aug. 27.—A search warrant against Wm. O'Connell of Monson, for liquor keeping, was returned to the court, and the defendant will be given a hearing next week.

28.—Frank McKeon of Wales, who was charged with a criminal assault upon Daniel Holden, was acquitted, the evidence failing to show that he made any attack whatever upon the plaintiff, but that the latter's death resulted from disease.

29—Daniel McKelligott, charged with an assault upon Patrick McKelligott, was released, the evidence not being satisfactory for conviction. The former also had a hearing for not appearing in court when summoned as a witness, and after paying $10 and costs he went his way.

H. C. Sanger and John A. King, charged with trespassing on land of J. Corey at Palmer Center, were discharged for lack of evidence.

31.—Thomas Dempsy of West Brookfield, for drunkenness, committed in default of $7.58.

George Green of Palmer, for drunkenness, committed to the Massachusetts Reformatory at Concord, it being his third offence.

The Strike Unsettled.

Another week has made practically no change in the situation of the strike at the works of the Palmer Carpet Company. The weavers have continued to hold secret meetings in Hibernian Hall to discuss their grievances, and Tuesday evening a committee was appointed to wait upon President Dewey, but the interview was fruitless, as he declined to grant them the old price of 5¾ cents per yard, but stated, according to the weavers, that if they would resume work, after a week's time he might increase their wages one-quarter of a cent a yard. This proposition was not accepted, and all are united in the matter of remaining out until President Dewey makes a concession satisfactory to them. In Lowell, the strikers claim, the weavers are receiving ten cents a yard for Wilton, and have their knives kept in repair, but they do not ask for that but simply demand the old price. The machinery at the mill was started Monday morning, but of the number who are employed in the weaving department only one weaver and a loom fixer responded to the whistle. The mill therefore was obliged to shut down at noon, and the machinery has remained idle since that time. The striking weavers will hold another meeting to-morrow evening.

Fair Notes.

The fair of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society, which occurs Tuesday and Wednesday, Sept. 11th and 12th, promises to maintain the society's reputation for offering a good show. It is intended to have a grand display of all the steers and oxen on the track Tuesday, to encourage which the directors have offered premiums of $8 and $5, as first and second premiums, to the town making the best exhibition. The members' trotting class, to trot nearest to 3½ minutes, for which premiums are offered of $10, $5, $3 and $2. Also the three-minute class for prizes of $50, $25, $10, will take place Tuesday. Wednesday, as usual, will be devoted largely to the exhibition of horses. A new feature will be the grand parade of horses and colts around the track at eleven o'clock a. m. At 2 p. m. a new members' class for horses without record will try for prizes of $5, $4, $3. The conditions are that each horse will walk once around the track, then on passing under the wire will trot once around the track; the three horses coming in first will take the three prizes respectively. The 2.45 race for a purse of $125 will come off at 2.40 p. m., and the 2.30 race will occur at 3.00 p. m. for a purse of $175. Arrangements are being made for ball games each day, and will be definitely given next week. The Ware Cadet Band has been engaged to furnish music for Wednesday. Secretary Allen would be pleased to have exibitors make their entries as early as possible next week, which will save an overcrowding of busines at the last moment.

Base Ball.

Betts is doing excellent work in the field and at the bat.

The Palmers will play two teams on the park during the fair.

The Palmers would like to arrange a game with the Boston and Worcester league teams.

The Wide Awakes were defeated at West Warren last Saturday by a score of 22 to 6. They go to Ware to-morrow afternoon to play a game with the printers of that place.

The postponed game between the Palmers and Spencers will be played on the park a week from to-morrow. There is a good deal of interest manifested in the result, as the Palmers won the first game, and the Spencers say that they will win the second.

The indications are that the game on the park to-morrow afternoon, between the Palmers and L. J. Gunn's of Millers Falls, will be the most exciting contest of the season. The visiting team has an enviable record, being composed of efficient salaried players. The attendance is likely to be the largest seen this season.

A series of three games has been arranged between the Palmers and Thorndikes for Labor Day, the winning team to be tendered $100. The first game will be played at Thorndike in the morning, and the second on the park here in the afternoon at 3 o'clock. If it is necessary to play a third game in order to decide supremency, the date for the same will be arranged later. Since the defeat of the Thorndikes in two games Memorial Day, the team disbanded and a new one has been organized, which, it is claimed, is the strongest in this section, although the Palmers will try, at least, to get one run during each game.

The third annual match game between the North Ends and South Ends was played on the park Wednesday afternoon, resulting in a victory for the latter team by a score of 26 to 25. The contest was interesting at intervals, and heavy batting was the feature. The following is the composition of both nines: South Ends—D. F. Holden, captain; Tuthill, pitcher; Betts, catcher; Holden, 1st base; Foley, 2d base; Knox, 3d base; George Holden, short stop; Roach, right field; Henken, left field; Cook, center field. North Ends—W. W. Hall, captain; Lacey, pitcher; Beecher, catcher; Hall, 1st base; W. Caryl, 2d base; F. Caryl, 3d base; Wait, short stop; Farrell, right field; Magrath, left field; Erskine, center field. The score by innings follows:

| INNINGS, | 1 | 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 | 9 |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| South Ends, | 4 | 3 | 3 | 2 | 2 | 5 | 2 | 2 | 3—26 |
| North Ends, | 5 | 4 | 1 | 1 | 0 | 2 | 7 | 2 | 3—25 |

HOLYOKES, 9; PALMERS, 7.

The Palmers lost the match game of ball on the park last Saturday afternoon in the presence of about 200 spectators, who saw the Holyokes play a steady game. The Palmers batted well, but the wild throwing by Cotter, Kee, Rooney and Kane was the worst of its kind seen on the diamond this season, and was the cause of the defeat of the home team. Betts did terrific batting throughout the game, making two earned runs, while the visitors batted evenly, but not hard. This is the score:

Cutting up the Fire District.

Editor Journal:—In the warrant for the special town meeting next week I find the following article:—

> ARTICLE 6. To see if the town will assent to the exclusion of the property of the Palmer Wire Manufacturing Company, and the property owned by John S. and Mary A. Holden, situated near the wire mill, from the limits of the territory of the Fire District.

If the writer correctly understands the law, an affirmative vote on this article does not exclude the property named from the fire district, but simply permits the district itself to vote to set it off if it shall see fit to do so. But I am sorry to see the Wire Co. take such a step, and it will be readily perceived that if the town assents to this proposition it will be followed speedily by similar requests from every resident of the district outside of the immediate village, including everybody beyond the Point of Rocks, the whole of Blanchardville and Tenneyville, the carpet mill property and Holden's woolen mill. This would make pretty hard lines for those who were left in the district. Residents of these outside portions do not enjoy the full benefits of the district, it is true, but it is no less true that whatever benefits the center of the district is an indirect benefit to every portion of it as well; and it ought not to be many years before the water mains are extended to all parts of the district, and fire alarm boxes ought to be placed near the wire mill, and at Tenneyville and Blanchardville at the earliest practicable moment. Even now I apprehend that if one of the wire mill tenements should get on fire, the proprietors would be very glad to have the steamer boys put on a stream of water from the river and save the adjoining houses. There are some people in the district, as in every community, who grudge every dollar paid in taxes, and would gladly do away with the fire apparatus, the water works, and every other improvement that costs a cent. Public spirit is something entirely foreign to their nature. I do not speak of this as applicable to the wire mill managers, but, if I mistake not, they have been opposed to the fire district from the start, and would have been glad to find some flaw in its organization whereby they could have quashed the whole thing. The wire company are supposed to be doing a fairly prosperous business, and, with a $150,000 plant which cost them only $25,000 or so, it don't look quite fair for them to try to get out of the fire district to evade a tax of less than $50, or even more than that. They can certainly afford to pay their tax as well as many a poor man who has little or nothing to pay even a small tax with. I hope the town will not assent to their request. Let us all stand together and manfully bear our portion of the expense for the common good.

The fall term of Monson academy began yesterday. Miss Anderson, preceptress, resigned her position on account of ill health. Her place has been filled by Miss Pease of Somers, Ct., and Miss Brockway will succeed Miss Hall. The other instructors of the institution are the same as last term.

A large number of Monson people will take in the cheap excursion from this place which the New London Northern railroad offer to Boston Saturday. The tickets are placed at $1.70 for the round trip, which entitles the holder to an admission to the cyclorama of the Battle of Bunker Hill or a sail down the harbor to Nantasket Beach. The train leaves Monson at 7.15 a. m.

A large number of the friends and neighbors of Mr. and Mrs. Elliot Brown called upon them rather unceremoniously Tuesday evenining, to remind them of the 15 anniversary of their marriage. The evening was pleasantly passed with refreshments, music and games, and before the guests took their leave they left as a slight token of their esteem two handsome easy chairs.

The Wales base ball club came here Saturday afternoon, and with Crowley of Ware in the box anticipated a walk-over with the home team. This is the first time the Monsons have played together this season, and they showed up well, especially at the bat. They out-played the Wales team and won with this score:

Dr. J. P. Rand, who has been associated in practice with his brother in this place for several years, has moved to Worcester this week, and opened an office at 37 Pearl street. The doctor has been a successful practitioner and has made many friends during his residence here, who will sincerely regret his removal, while wishing for him a large measure of success in his new location.

The Business Outlook Not as Bad as Painted.

The rumor which has been diligently spread in the papers about the stoppage of the North Monson woolen mills needs a little explaining which is due the owners and their tenants, Messrs. Lindley & Co., who are on the most friendly terms, and it is owing to the dissolution of the latter firm by limitation of partnership that they will not renew the lease. During the term of Messrs. Lindley & Co.'s lease they were to keep the property in good repair—not the owners. It will not "be idle for an indefinite time," only long enough to carry out plans and improvements contemplated last May, when the lease expired. These were a new dye and dry house, office, and apron 16x78 feet for the dam. Automatic fire extinguishers have been placed in every 10 square feet of the mill and picker room, a new steam pump capable of discharging 400 gallons per minute has been put in, and a 4000-gallon tank has been erected on the tower to supply the sprinklers. These improvements have placed the mill at as low rates, and in the best mutual insurance companies, as any first-class mill in New England. Parties are anxious to lease it now, but as it will take some time to carry out the contemplated plans, the owners are not anxious to lease it at present, but by the first of the year business will probably be in full blast again.

Proposed Compromise of Fay, Peck & Co.

About 250 of the unpaid help of Fay, Peck & Co. responded to the summons to attend the meeting at the factory Saturday afternoon. The New York branch of the firm was present at the meeting, also Mr. Hersey, who came, he said, as a disinterested party, to say a few words concerning the proposed settlement and of the condition of the firm. A statement of the condition of the firm was then read, and the proposition made to the help that they should accept in payment of their claims 62½ cents on $1. This is the financial statement of the firm:

| LIABILITIES. | |
|---|---|
| Due the help | $36,000 |
| Due the importers | 70,000 |
| Mortgage on mill | 12,000 |
| Town Taxes | 500 |
| Total | $118,500 |
| ASSETS. | |
| Cash on hand | $27,000 |
| Real estate, less mortgage | 13,000 |
| Total | $40,000 |

A paper was circulated among the help for signature, of those would accept the proposed settlement, and some fifteen signed their names to the document, the others claiming the full amount of their wages. After two hours of fruitless discussion the meeting was adjoured to Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

The meeting and the proposed settlement has been the one absorbing topic of discussion. The help showed their dissapointment at the meeting by refusing to sign the paper, the firm having stated up to within a week that they would pay the help in full. The help claim that they are preferred creditors, and that the importers should not be paid anything until they have been paid in full. The firm state as their reason for offering the importers 20 per cent, that if the law is given its course the asignee would settle all accounts, taking one or two years to do it in. He would draw a salary and the legal fees would be heavy, so that in the end there would be much less than $36,000 to distribute among the help, and the importers get nothing, it would also necessitate the selling of the mill property at a great sacrifice, and by giving the importers 20 per cent they will be satisfied, and they will be able to start the mill at once.

Many of the help have been paid money at different times during the winter, so they are not losing 37½ cents on a dollar, and the amount due some is very small, and their loss is small compared to those who have received only a small part of their winter's wages, but the latter are the more willing to sign the paper than those who have little due them.

The adjourned meeting was held at the factory yesterday afternoon and was not so largely attended as the first. The meeting was without any special interest. The general feeling among the help was, that the best thing to do was to sign the paper, believing they would lose far more if the case went through the customary legal proceedings, and many who refused to sign the paper at the previous meeting, and nearly all who were in attendance, signed the document.

There are still some objectors who say they will not sign the paper. It is hoped, however, that they will change their minds, in view of the facts, that the best legal advice gave them to understand without a doubt it was the best thing that could be done, and the best interests of the town demand that the business be continued this winter.

THREE RIVERS.

Miss Nellie Cooley of Enfield is the guest of A. A. Warriner.

A. W. Warriner, clerk in the Palmer Mill office, is on a week's vacation at Monson.

Mrs. Edward Fenderson is taking a month's vacation at her home in Biddeford, Maine.

The bridge on the New London Northern railroad just north of the station is being repaired.

The French Catholic society will hold a picnic in the grove at Four Corners tomorrow, commencing at 1 o'clock in the afternoon and continuing till night. The proceeds will be used for the benefit of the church.

Albert Rodman is getting to be quite a noted fish man, having caught eighteen black bass in the last four trips.

There will be grand excursion to Boston Saturday, leaving here at 6.58 a. m. The fare for the round trip is $1.70, which admits you to the cyclorama of the Battle of Bunker Hill or a trip to Nantasket Beach. Also another excursion to Rlock Island the same day, $1.50 for the reund trip, the tickets good to return Monday. Train leaves at 6.58.

As Leonard Aldrich was returning from Springfield last Monday, with his family and a Mr. Peterson of Weymouth, his horse became frightened at a scrap of paper in the road and jumped to one side, throwing out Mr. Aldrich, his six-years-old daughter and Mr. Peterson. The horse ran over a mile with Mrs. Aldrich in the wagon, but she was not idle in the meantime. She stepped over the dashboard on to the whiffletree and grasping the backstrap began pulling the check-rein, and by talking to the horse brought him to a standstill. The little girl was considerably bruised, and Mr. Aldrich's right shoulder was somewhat injured, but otherwise no serious damage was done.

A Notable Wedding.

One of the most notable weddings that has taken place in this village for a long time occurred Wednesday evening at the Union church. At 7.30 o'clock Homer A. Shaw, of the firm of Shaw Bros., and Miss Belle M. Sanderson were escorted to the altar by Frank A. Parsons, who acted as best man, and Miss Sadie J. Shannon of Belchertown bridesmaid. Miss Lena Brown of Palmer played the wedding march, and over them hung the wedding bell. Rev. P. W. Lyman of Belchertown performed the ceremony with a ring. The bride was dressed very handsomely in a white moire silk and the bridal veil trimmed with smilax. The bridesmaid was also very tastlly dressed in a white cashmere. The church was crowded to its utmost, many standing outside unable to get in. Arthur L. Parsons and Guy C. Stanchfield were ushers. The church was handsomely decorated with flowers, by the Christian Endeavor society, of which the groom and bride are members. After the ceremony the happy pair were driven to the house of the bride's uncle, A. Parsons, where a private lunch was given, the following persons being present: Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Shaw, E. F. Shaw, Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Shaw, Rev. P. W. Lyman and wife, Mr. and Mrs. C. Parsons, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Holden, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Shannon and son, Frank A. Parsons, Arthur L. Parsons, Guy C. Stanchfield, Miss Flora B. Stevens, Miss Julia M. Winchell, Miss Julia Holden and Miss Sadie J. Shannon. There were many presents, both ornamental and useful. The happy couple stopped at the Week's House that night, and Thursday morning they started on a week's wedding tour, taking in Block Island, Providence and Martha's Vineyard. Upon their return they will go to housekeeping as soon as possible in the house owned by Miss Jane Thompson.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Miss Grace Corliss, who has had charge of the music in the public schools the past year, has resigned her position here to accept a similar one at a better salary at Biddeford, Me. Miss Corliss has given good satisfaction in her work, and has made many warm friends. The school committee regret losing her services as teacher.

The East Congregational Sunday-school are to have a picnic next Tuesday at Hoyt's grove, Hardwick pond. Tickets 50 cts., and children 25 cts. for the round trip, including collation and all the privileges of the grounds, boats, etc. The committee have been active in their preparations, that all who go may have a most enjoyable time.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, Aug. 29, 1888.

One of the quiet issues of the campaign, which is being cared for by an organization which is making little noise in its work, is the prohibitory constitutional amendment which the Republicans in the Legislature advanced one stage at the last session. This issue is also being met on the other side by the vigorous work of the liquor dealers. But it is not true to say, as nearly as I can find out, as the temperance Repnblicans said in their recent address, that the liquor people have emissaries at work in every senatorial and representative district in the state. That statement was an exaggeration such as I suppose even good men will occasionally be guilty of. A large proportion of the districts are sure for one side or the other, without the need of work by either party, It is in the doubtful districts that the contests are made. Secretary Jewell of the Massachusetts Total Abstinence Society, which is at the head of th e work for the prohibitory amendment inside of the Republican party, tells me that most of the work in the representative districts is done in those in which the majority was under thirty on either side. In such districts there is some chance of success, but of what good is it to pour out money where it is certain beforehand that the votes will go the other way? The temperance movement in politics is not a missionary effort. They are not trying to persuade men of the moral heinousness of liquor selling, but they are trying to organize and get out the temperance vote. In most cases it is a stay-at-home vote which is responsible for the defeat of temperance candidates.

These temperance men think that the prohibitory amendment is in danger of defeat. In ordinary years one-third of the House of Representatives is Democratic, and the Democratic party, with but few exceptions, has voted against the prohibitory amendment, though the secretary of the prohibitory state committee does say today that of the recruits of his party he finds that as many of them proportionally are from the Democratic party as from the Republican. Well, if the liquor men can secure a man over one-third of the next House, they are sure of the defeat of the prohibitory amendment. That is the reason why they are doing more this year than usual with the lower branch of the Legislature. Generally they confine their effort to the upper branch, for if they can get a majority of its forty members, it is as good for them as if they had a majority of the 240 in the House. But the amendment alters the position of matters somewhat this year. The temperance men feel confident of carrying a majority of both branches in the Legislature and say that if the amendment is defeated they will put through a prohibitory law anyway. Their plan is to let the amendment try its fate first and if it succeeds they will be content to have the issue of prohibition go thus directly to the people. But if the amendment should be killed, then they will try for the law

But as regards the Senate, there is good reason for saying that the liquor men are not overlooking that. They appreciate the importance of keeping a license majority in the upper branch and they have already taken pains to see that their interests are protected. By the way, it looks very much as if the proportion of senators returned would be smaller than usual. One of the state house frequenters, who has taken particular pains to look over the field, makes this prediction: that only the following will be reëlected: Messrs. Clark of Essex, Crosby of Berkshire, Hartwell of Worcester, Hathorne of Suffolk, Howe of Middlesex, Kingsly of Middlesex, Messenger of Bristol, Palmer of Middlesex, Pike of Essex, Spellman of Hampden, Sprague of Suffolk, Stevens of Norfolk, Tucker of Norfolk. Private interests are at work fixing things to their advantage as far as possible and many matters are decided already which the outsider would not expct to come up for several weeks. It is a great year for wire-pulling.

The Draper men keep up a bold front and say that things are going on very satisfactorily for them. This afternoon I have seen Fred Williams, who is in charge, next to the Draper "boys," of the general's canvass. He says that they lost in Lawrence, to be sure, where they expected to get more votes, but they have much encouragements in the returns which come in and they are well satisfied with the outlook at present. The delegates who have been elected, he says, are only about one hundred out of 1200, and there is abundant chance yet for the election of a large number of Draper men. On the other hand, a visit to the office of the good-humored Col. Campbell in the Equitable building reveals the fact that the Ames men are highly pleased at the outlook and think that nothing can defeat the governor's renomination. They point to their great success in Lawrence where, in what was supposed to be a Draper stronghold, they carried every ward. The returns from the country towns which have come in show that the governor is as strong there as he is in the cities, and there is clearly a rapid tide running toward the renomination of the governor. Delegates will be chosen to-morrow in Fall River, Salem and Lynn and the Draper men do not expect to get much there. But if the Ames column is largely strengthened in those places, it will by so much the more increase his prestige and make the doubtful men all the more anxious to get down early on the Ames side. An impartial observer here would say that Ames's chances were decidedly better than Draper's even though he admitted all that was said by the Draper managers. The general is expected to return home in time to have his great public reception by Saturday night at the latest. The newspapers are printing cuts of him which make him a very good looking man, but that does not make him governor.

In the national campaign the Republicans are cheering themselves with the prospect that they will have a protectionist congressman from every district in the state. The way they reckon is this: the Republican candidate will, in every district except the fourth, which is hopelessly Democratic. But the candidate in that district, who is regarded as sure to be Gen. Collins's successor, is Joseph H. O'Neil, the present city clerk of Boston. He is a pronounced protectionist and thus the Republicans expect to see a solid protection delegation in Congress next year from Massachusetts. But there is an election to be held in November and the hatching day for these chickens is still more than two months ahead.

The third party men are working well this year. Next week Wednesday evening will occur their first large rally. It will be in Tremont Temple, with the Meionaon engaged for an overflow, and Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, their presidential nominee, will be present. The day after he will speak at Northampton and at Springfield in the evening. Prohibitory organizations from Lowell, Cambridge and elswhere will come to the Boston meeting and they expect to make it a great success. When it comes to votes, however, they are not counting on much more than they had last year.

The Democratic state convention will occur at Springfield a week from to-day, but they are not at all decided upon their candidate for governor. The state committee, so far as it has a preference, is not in favor of William E. Russell of Cambridge, while in the state outside there seems to be quite a move for him. He would command the support of the young men, but the young men are not in favor with the old liners.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., June 27, 1888.—Swift's Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga., Gentlemen: In the early part of the present year, a bad case of blood poisoning appeared upon me. I began taking S. S. S. under advice of another, and to-day I feel greatly improved. I am still taking the medicine and shall continue to do so until I am perfectly well. I believe it will effect a perfect cure.

Yours truly,
DOC. P. HOWARD,
111 West Sixth St.

COLUMBIA, S. C., July 7, 1888.—The Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga., Gentlemen: I was a great sufferer from muscular rheumatism for two years. I could get no permanent relief from any medicine prescribed by my physician. I took over a dozen bottles of your S. S. S., and now am as well as I ever was in my life. I am sure your medicine cured me, and I would recommend it to any one suffering from any blood disease.

Yours truly,
O. E. HUGHES,
Conductor C. & G. R. R.

WACO, TEXAS, May 9, 1888.—Gentleman: The wife of one of my customers was terribly afflicted with a loathsome skin disease, that covered her whole body. She was confined to her bed several years by this affliction and could not sleep from a violent itching and stinging of the skin. The disease baffled the skill of the physicians who treated it. Her husband finally began giving his wife Swift's Specific, and she commenced to improve almost immediately, and within a few weeks she was apparently well. She is now a hearty, fine-looking lady, with no trace of the affliction left.

Yours very truly,
J. E. SEARS,

Two Old Cat.

Oh, yes, I saw the players and their parti-colored socks,
And the "captain" and the "umpire" and the "pitcher" in his box"
They are modern inovations that I noted as I sat
Aloft with you. It won't compare with
Two
Old
Cat!

You remember how we played it, Jim, when you and I were young.
And upon the farm together? Why has poet never sung
Of the game of the lane and roadway? What can compare with that?
There is life-blood in that memory of
Two
Old
Cat!

Our bats were whittled out of pine, and any size would do;
Our ball of yarn wound tightly round a piece of rubber shoe,
And covered o'er with calfskin tight, and, oh, Jehoshaphat!
How we did welt the whizzing thing in
Two
Old
Cat!

I'm in favor of improvements, but the style of ball to-day
Seems to lack the healthful feature of the good old-fashioned way;
It's complicated for me, and the game these men were at Wasn't stirring in comparison with
Two
Old
Cat!

A DESERVED REBUKE.

One day during the American Revolution, an officer not dressed in uniform, was passing on horseback by some military works that were being prepared by a small squad of soldiers. He found the leader of the party merely standing by and looking on at the operations, which were being carried on with difficulty, owing to the small number of men. The officer, seeing the state of affairs, and that assistance was much needed, inquired of the man why he did not render a little aid instead of standing idle. The latter, in great astonishment, turned around, it is said, with all the pomp of an emperor, and replied, "Sir, I am a corporal!" "You are, are you?" said the officer; "I did not know that," and, raising his hat in solemn mockery, he continued, "I ask your pardon, Mr. Corporal." Dismounting from his horse, he threw off his coat, and not until he was tired out with sheer hard work did the stranger cease to render assistance to the squad; and then, turning around to the corporal said, "Mr. Corporal, when you have another such job as this, and have not men enough, send for George Washington, and he will come and help you a second time." And, to the utter amazement of the poor corporal, he found that the unknown officer who addressed him was indeed no other than his own commander-in-chief.

A Good Appetite

Is ssential to good health; but is often lost owing to the poverty and impurity of the blood and the weakening effect of the changing season. Hood's Sarsaparilla is a wonderful medicine for creating an appetite, toning the digestion and giving strength to the whole syst m.

"I had been troubled with pimples on my lower limbs, loss of sleep and appetite, and in fact was generally run down. After taking Hood's Sarsaparilla the pimples disappeared, my appetite was renewed, and I feel better in every respect." P. DEVLIN, S. E. corner 10th and Buttonwood Sts., Philadelphia.

"I must say Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best medicine I ever used. Last spring I had no appetite, and the least work I did fatigued me ever so much. I began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, and soon I felt as if I could do as much in a day as I had formerly done in a week. My appetite is voracious." MRS. M. V. BAYARD, Atlantic City, N. J.

TRINITY CHURCH · WARE · MASS · H W HARTWELL & WM C RICHARDSON · ARCHTS · 68 DEVONSHIRE ST BOSTON, MASS

The Trinity Episcopal church at Ware, a cut of which is given above, is being erected on the corner of Pleasant and Parks streets, fronting the east on Parks street. The building is 40 by 65 feet, with circular chancel in the rear, making the total length nearly 75 feet. The structure is of wood, with Longmeadow brown-stone to the top of the basement windows. The whole building is to be covered with shingles, which will be stained different colors, giving a very fine effect.

The main entrance is in the tower at the south-east corner, and on the other front corner is a porch entrance, while at the rear is an entrance to the vestry for the convenience of the rector. The auditorium has a seating capacity of about 250 and will be finished with open timbered roof with an extreme height of 34 feet. The wood-work is to be of cypress, finished in oil. The chancel is 16 feet wide and 20 feet deep. On one side is the organ chamber, and on the other the vestry, rector's study, closets, etc. The front gable and chancel windows will be reserved for memorial windows, while those of the sides will be glazed with cathedral stained glass. The entrance to the basement is by a staircase from the tower. It is about 10 feet high in the clear, and is well lighted from the east and south. It has a room 26 by 36 for the Sunday-school, a class room, guild room, and a room that may be used as a kitchen or for other purposes. There will be sliding sashes between the principal rooms of the basement, so they may be thrown together if desired. The wood-work of the basement is also to be of cypress. The building will be heated by steam, lighted by gas, and ventilated by cold-air flues in chimneys and ventilating ducts in the gables. The architects as Hartwell & Richardson of Boston, and the contractor H. A. Magrath of Ware. The rector, Rev. C. W. Duffield, is greatly beloved by his people, and it is largely due to his untiring efforts that they are to soon have so beautiful a place of worship.

The Sin of Omission.

It isn't the thing that you do, dear,
It's the things you leave undone
Which gives you a bit of a heartache
At the setting of the sun.
The tender word forgotten,
The letter you did not write,
The flower you might have sent, dear,
Are your haunting ghosts to-night.

The stone you might have lifted
Out of a brother's way,
The bit of heartsome counsel
You are hurried too much to say.
The loving touch of the hand, dear,
The gentle and winsome tone,
That you had no time nor thought for,
With troubles enough of your own.

These little acts of kindness,
So easily out of mind,
These chances to be angels
Which even mortals find—
They come in night and silence,
Each chill, reproachful wraith,
When hope is faint and flagging,
And a plight has dropped on faith.

For life is all too short, dear,
And sorrow is all too great
To suffer our slow compassion
That tarries until too late,
And it's not the things you do, dear,
It's the things you leave undone
Which give you the bitter heartache
At the setting of the sun.

TWO SCHEMERS.

"Oh what a tangled web we weave
When first we practice to deceive."

The Widow Smith sat up late, reading the county paper; usually the Weekly Budget did not interest her, but on this occasion she read and re-read a certain part of its columns and laid it down at last with a sigh.

"Wants a wife, does he?" she mused aloud; "tired of livin' alone. It's a peart chance for some one to get a good husband ef he's what he advertises."

Then she resumed the paper and studied it carefully.

"'A good pervider.' That's one pint. 'Middle-aged and well-to-do.' Laws! ef it wasn't for the—"

The widow stopped abruptly, and looked around with a startled expression.

"It must have been the cat," she said to herself. "I'm as nervous as a mouse. I'm sure there ain't any harm in it. I dare say he'll be glad of it when he finds out. If he hadn't been so particular that he wanted a widow without any—"

Then she broke off abruptly and sat thinking.

"I've heerd tell," she mused, "that a man who amounted to ennything wouldn't have to advertise for a wife. 'All alone in the world.' Poor man! I feel uncommonly drawn toward him. 'Likes peace and quiet.' So do I. We're of a mind there. I'd answer it if it wasn't for the—"

The clock striking startled her. After a long fit of thinking she went to the clock-shelf and took down a pen and a bottle of ink; then she looked in the family Bible and found some writing-paper.

It took the Widow Smith a long time to compose that letter. When she finally had it to her mind, she copied it, after which she read it a great many times.

"I hope I hevn't done wrong," she said to her conscience. "But I can almost see the hand of Providence pintin' the way. 'A widower an' well-to-do, alone in the world.' It would be almost wicked not to try."

Then she wound up the clock, put the cat out, and was soon dreaming of a new adorer.

Mr. Josiah Brown, a comfortable farmer, who lived in the next township, was the man whose advertisement for a wife had enlisted the sympathy of the Widow Smith. He had been in the lonely and forlorn state of a widower about a year, and was tired of single life. He cast his eye, figuratively speaking, upon all the widows in his neighborhood, but they found no favor in his sight; so he advertised in the Weekly Budget and had half a bushel of letters in answer to his demand. All the answers had attractions, but there was only one that seemed to fulfil his expectations. It was a tidy little missive and was signed "Widow Smith." "She don't hum and haw an' beat round the bush, but comes right to the point like a man," he said to himself. So he wrote to her, and in due time a second letter came. It pleased him more than the first.

"She's Mrs. Brown No. 2," he chuckled. "She says she's small—I like leetle wimmen—has a farm an' a good house, an' of course is all alone in the world or she would'nt have answered at all. Says her friends call her a good housekeeper. She's a master hand to write—begins every word with a capital an' she appointed a meetin' at Gabriel Simpson's! Sho! I've known Gabe sence we was boys together. I wonder ef he'll help me out about the—"

The good man choked abruptly, and seemed flurried.

"She won't mind arter we're joined. I'll appoint next Thursday to meet. Friday ain't lucky and Saturday's too near Sunday. I'll tell Simpson to keep dark till I come there. Wonder if the widder is good lookin'. Wonder if she'll be dissappinted."

The widow was first at Simpson's, and held his best ear for a private audience.

Then she was all smiles, talking over pickling and preserving receipts with Mrs. Simpson, who was an old acquaintance. When Josiah Brown drove up with his span of grays, best Sunday coat on, best foot foremost, the widow was observing him from behind the curtains of the sitting-room window.

"W-e-l-l!" she said with a long breath, "he ain't to say han'sum. He's a leetle bow-legged an' has a cast in one eye. I dunno as I'd have him if it wasn't for the–"

Before she had finished Mr. Simpson was presenting Mr. Brown, and then all hands sat down to a "biled" dinner.

"I like good vittles," said the widower, with a knowing glance at his vis-a-vis, the widow, and he passed his plate for the third time.

"S'do I," responded the lady with a vivid blush. "Mr. Smith used to say he couldn't bear to eat away from home, 'cause we had such good meals."

Mr. Brown beamed at her.

After dinner he took Simpson to one side. "Pretty as a picture an' plump as a partridge; looks like she could keep house for me and the—ugh! ugh! ugh?"

A severe fit of coughing interrupted Mr. Brown's recital. Simpson smiled knowingly.

"You're in luck if you get the widder," he said. "But I can't say it's quite fair not to tell her about the—"

"H-u-s-h!" whispered Brown, nervously. "It'll be all right. I'll make her a good husband and she won't mind the—"

Another severe fit of coughing, which nearly strangled the good man, nipped his discourse in the bud.

"I say, Simpson," he inquired, presently, "has the widow any—"

"None in the land of the living," interrupted Mr. Simpson, hurriedly.

Mr. Brown rubbed his hands with satisfaction. Then the two joined the ladies, and the courtship proceeded with such alacrity that the day was set, and as a neutral ground, Simpson's house was tendered for the occasion.

But Mr. Brown visited the widow at her lonely house several times, and the widow in company with Mrs. Simpson spent a day at the Brown homestead and was much impressed with its "peace and quiet." She whispered to Mrs. Simpson.

"I'm so thankful I am going to marry into a home where there ain't any—"

"H-u-s-h! he's looking at us," cautioned her friend.

Then both ladies laughed heartily, as if they knew something that pleased them immensely.

While Mr. Brown was showing off his roomy house he hazarded a remark:

"Its kind er lonesome in a house where they are nobody but grown-ups. I believe you told me you hadn't any—"

"They are all in the grave-yard! every one of 'em, poor things!" sobbed the widow with her handkerchief to her eyes.

It took some time for Mr. Brown to undo the mischief. He was compelled to support the clinging form and dry the tears he had drawn forth by his careless remark.

"She's a tender hearted little thing!" he said to Simpson; "she'll come around all right when she sees the—" Here he sneezed.

"You old fraud!" thought Simpson. But he only said, politely, "Of course she will."

They were married quietly, only the immediate friends of the family being present at the ceremony, and they went to a town where nobody knew them, and spent their honeymoon prowling around in each other's company, seeing the sights, and were as spooney as old folks in love usually are. Not that either of them was old. No, indeed!

When they went back they first located at the Brown homestead. As they couldn't live in two places at once, the widow had decided to sell and invest her money in more land in the neighborhood of her new home, a plan highly approved by her new partner.

The first cloud on the horizon of their new lives appeared when they reached home. It was no larger than a man's hand—or a boy's hand—in fact that was just the shape it took on the white walls.

Mr. Brown looked frightened; but he asked boldly: "My dear, don't you think it's kinder lonesome in a house where there isn't any—"

A curious interruption happened. A troop of half grown boys rushed in at that moment to welcome the bride. They did not go through the ceremony of knocking, and seemed very much at home. They could have sung "We are seven," exactly as to numbers.

"Who are they?" gasped the new Mrs. Brown.

"I-I-I don't know," faltered Mr. Brown, his legs shaking like castinets. "Run home, boys, run home."

"Where'll we go, pa?" inquired the youngest, a cherub of five.

"Oh," gasped the bride faintly. "I thought you wanted a quiet home! I have been basely deceived! You said you hadn't any—"

"Boys don't make any noise," asserted Mr. Brown. "An' I thought, as long as you hadn't any—"

"Oh, good heavens! Who are they? What do you want!"

"We've come, ma! We're all here!" shouted a chorus of voices as a whole schoolful of girls rushed in; "please introduce us to our new pa."

But "new pa" had fainted, and hung limp and speechless over the arm of his chair.

The noise brought him to. He asked if the earthquake had done much damage, and seemed in a dazed condition for some time. Indeed the shock of finding himself the trevet-point of seven daughters was too much. His first intelligent words were those of reproach. Simpson had been sent for and was present. Mr. Brown looked feebly at his distressed wife and said:

"You told me you hadn't any—"

"No, dear, I said they were all in the graveyard. So they were, boarding with the sexton. They are real sweet girls, seven of them. You must love them for my sake."

"Seven and seven make fourteen," figured the eldest male cherubin. "It's a good thing the house is large enough to hold us all."

A peace was patched up—several peaces in fact, and after a while the new couple found that what can't be cured must be endured. Mr. Brown took the longest to come around, but when he did, he gave in fully. In a moment of confidence his wife told him that she knew beforehand all about the boys, and had taken her own cue from that bit of design. Mrs. Simpson had told her.

"Just like a woman—never can keep a secret," said Mr. Brown severely,

"Oh, no, dear," answered his wife, "because, though she told me all about your little scheme, she never said a word to you about mine."

And Mr. Brown was obliged to admit that he was fairly beaten at his own little game.

A PECULIAR BRIDAL TRIP.

One day recently, at Hartford, says the New York Sun, a charcoal cart drawn by a pair of meek-eyed oxen drove up to a clergyman's residence in this town, and the occupants alighted and marched up to the front door. The man was dressed in his working clothes and his face was covered with the dust of the coal which he had been peddling all day. She wore the fashion of 1850, and evidently was pinked out in the finest she could afford. They were ushered into the minister's study and informed him that they had come to get married. On inquiring for the license it was found that this important document had been forgotten, and the groom and his lady love proceeded to the town clerk's office to get it. The bride was asked her age, and after a series of giggles, responded she did not know. "Oh, tell him you are forty," suggested the groom. "You know you are that." And forty was recorded.

Holding the document in his grimy hand, the groom, followed by the bride, started for the clergyman's where they were soon married. Returning to their cart after the ceremony the wife made two or three unsuccessful efforts to climb in over the front wheel. She had to give it up, and her husband led her around to the rear of the cart, where he tenderly boosted her in, and helped her to a seat by his side, her feet swinging in the air. They started southward, apparently as happy as though they were begining their bridal trip in a palace car.

Our Graves.

A mound, a stone, and violets,
A bird song in the air,
A child that gathers flowers, and lets
The wind play with his hair;
A field of wheat across the hedge,
Rippled by fairy hands,
A silver stream that drownward runs
To cheer the lower lands.

No mound, no stone, no violets—
And blue sea overhead,
A sobbing wind that ne'er forgets
Its chantings for the dead;
Beneath the stars on summer nights,
That deep, blue grave, how fair!
The while upon the shores the waves
Beat low, as if in prayer.

No mound, no stone, no violets,
No birds, no wave, no star,
A spot where memory forgets
What spring and summer are;
Deeper it lies than deep-sea graves,
From land and sea apart,
A grave so sad and desolate!
A grave within the heart!

SAM HOUSTAN'S ROMANCE.

"It happened at least thirty years ago," said W. C. Coup, the veteran showman, to a Detroit Free Press reporter. "I was then what might be termed a young man, and traveling in Louisiana. I put up at a hotel in a rather small town, where hotels are as rare as other evidences of civilization. I had just gone to my room on the night succeeding my arrival when I was honored with a call from the landlord.

"Mr. Coup," he said, "there'll be another fellow up to bunk with you in a few minutes. You'd better wait and arrange with him about the side of the bed you are to sleep on. If he walks in and finds you sleeping on his side there might be a coolness spring up between you."

At that time I was a stranger to Southern customs, and the manner of doing things struck me as being a trifle irregular. I offered no objection, however. It has always been a rule with me to maintain the silence which is said to be golden when I am among strangers in a strange land. I afterwards discovered that it was quite customary to put as many as three in a bed in that particular hotel. In about ten minutes my bedfellow came up. He was an elderly man, with eyes that seemed to pierce a fellow from circumference to center.

His bedroom candle lighted up a face which I have never since been able to eradicate from my memory. It was thin almost to emaciation, but at the same time one of the most interesting faces that it has been my good fortune to gaze upon. When he smiled I was irresistibly drawn toward him. It was the saddest, tenderest, sweetest smile that I have ever seen.

He spoke to me kindly as he placed his candle upon the little table, then drew up a chair close beside me in front of the open fire. Twenty minutes afterward I could have sworn that I had known the man all my life. He was a brilliant conversationalist, and his stock of knowledge regarding men and things of the day seemed to be inexhaustible.

"By-the-way," I said, after we had talked well into the night, "I see Gen. Sam Houston is billed to speak here to-morrow night. I shall certainly go to hear him."

He glanced up at me quickly.

"Are you an admirer of his?" he asked.

"I will have to answer that question by using both yes and no," I replied. "I greatly admire him for his sturdy independence, his political ability, and his apparent hatred of all shams. But there seems to be another side of his character which I do not admire. The manner in which he deserted his Cherokee wife after he had left the nation and returned to civilization I regard as wholly contemptible. Do you know him?"

"I have seen him," he replied quietly, smiling the sad smile which had before struck me so forcibly.

"Well, don't you agree with me?" I asked.

"Before I answer that question I would like to tell you a little story," the old man replied, and it seemed to me that his voice trembled a little. "I once knew a man who held a prominent office in Tennessee. He was a young man then—not older than yourself, and with just as quick a tongue when it came to condemning all sorts of wrong and injustice. His position gave him the entree into the best social circles, and he wooed and married a beautiful girl. On his part it was purely a love match. He worshipped her as he had never before worshipped anything on earth. For a time he was happy—after the manner of men who place their entire lives in the hands of one woman. By and by he noticed that his beautiful young wife was growing dejected and unhappy. Often when he spoke to her in terms of endearment when they were alone she would burst into tears, tear herself out of his arms, and escape from the room. On one of these occasions he followed her to her room and insisted on an explanation. At first she refused, but finally yielded, telling him a story which crushed him to the very earth. She said she had never loved him, but had been forced by her friends to marry him on account of his position. She told him more than that. She told him that long before their marriage occurred she had loved another man.

"That night the husband left his home and high official position and disappeared. Shaving the hair from his head and tearing his broadcloth garments into shreds, he donned the scanty apparel of the savage and became a member of the Cherokee nation. The members of the tribe treated him with the greatest consideration and respect, and he became a sort of an oracle among them. In time he married an Indian maiden, thereby widening the breach between himself and the past. After a number of years had passed, however, he grew weary of savagery, and his mind reverted to the life which had been his before the great trouble came upon him. Finally he bade his wife and untutored friends a temporary farewell, and drifted into Texas. Here he soon arose to recognition, and in a comparatively short space of time once more held an important position. But he had not deserted his Indian wife. On several occasions he returned to the tribe to see her and induce her to return with him to civilization. But the poor untutored squaw was a thousand times nobler than the beautiful society woman who had ruined his life in early manhood. She loved him passionately, but positively refused to accede to his requests. 'I would only disgrace you,' she said; 'I'm not fit to go out into your world.' Finally the husband returned without her—very much against his wishes, remember—and a few months later word reached him that his Indian wife had been picked up at the bottom of a cliff by members of her tribe with her neck broken. She had loved him too well to live without him. The white wife came from the first ranks of social civilization, the poor Indian girl from the ranks of what is popularly called savagery. That, young man, is the manner in which Gen. Sam Houston deserted his Cherokee bride."

I had been deeply interested in the old man's narrative, and when he had finished and sat with his keen eyes—I fancied they were moist with tears—fixed on the embers of the open fire, I hastened to assure him that I was only too glad to be set right regarding Gen. Houston's true character.

"I shall listen to his speech to-morrow night with increased interest now," I said. "You must have known him well."

"Yes, I have seen a good deal of him," he replied. "But, my young friend, you must not allow your enthusiasm to run away with your discretion. Gen. Houston has his faults—plenty of them—just like the rest of the world."

"By-the-way," I said, as we pushed back our chairs and prepared for bed, "I believe you have omitted telling me your name. I have spent such a pleasant evening that I should really like to know to whom I am really indebted for it."

"Ah," he said with the same smile, "I believe I did omit that little formality. My name is Sam Houston."

We did not quarrel regarding the side of the bed he was to occupy. Gen. Houston might have had both sides had he expresed a wish for them."

AN UNPROTECTED FEMALE.

A tall woman, with cold, clear spectacles perched above a severe, strong-minded countenance, got on at Jim River crossing. 'Conductor!" she said to the functionary, as she sat up very straight in the middle of the seat and held her grip in her lap; "conductor, I've been insulted half a dozen times since I came on this train!"

"Why, madame," he replied, "how was it?"

"That cornstalk dude with the black cap tried to sell me a vile book entitled, 'Life and Influence of Jesse James!'"

"Ah?"

"Don't you 'ah' me, conductor; that don't help matters any! Your brakeman tried to take hold of my arm when I got on the train. He knew I was alone and had no one to protect me, the wretch!"

"I am sorry, madam, but——"

"S'posen you are; it don't help matters any! That man on the front seat by the stove has been drinking. I smelt his breath when I came past. He ought to be put off!"

"I'll see that——"

"You'll see nothing, conductor. You knew his breath smelt of rum before I told you. You think because I have nobody to protect me that you can insult me, too! Conductor, I believe you drink yourself! I know you use tobacco—there's a cigar in your vest pocket now, and you're the head of this precious trainload of human beings! Don't say another word to me, conductor, and if you dare to smoke that vile cigar, and while you're wallowing in such dissipation we are plunged through a bridge, I'll report you to the owners of the road! I don't hardly know what a woman have to put up with when she's traveling nowadays with no one to protect her!"

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, SEPTEMBER 7, 1888.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND's letter of acceptance is surely coming soon, so they say. Gen. Harrison ought to publish his letter at once, without waiting for the other one.

LABOR DAY has not attained a wide observance as yet, but it is the people's holiday, and labor will be the more dignified year by year by its increasing observance. The people have none too many holidays at the best.

MAINE has had a prohibitory law for nearly 40 years, and now has prohibition in her constitution, but a prohibitory party is considered necessary in the state all the same, though it might puzzle the leaders to give good reason for it.

THE New Hampshire Republicans nominated David H. Goodell of Antrim for governor at their state convention Tuesday. The Democrats of Connecticut the same day nominated Luzon B. Morris of New Haven to head their ticket.

JUDGE THURMAN was taken sick at New York last evening as he was about to address a large gathering in Madison Square Garden, but it is thought to be nothing serious. His campaign trip is proving a hard task for the old veteran.

THE Democrats had their opening rally of the campaign at Boston Monday evening, with Congressman Mills as speaker, and evolved considerable enthusiasm, Tremont Temple and the Meionaon being filled to repletion with interested audiences.

HOFFMANN, the remarkable child pianist, is coming to this country again by and by, for another concert tour. The little fellow is said to have gained greatly in health by his year's rest, and has played and composed only as he pleased, but he will be looked after pretty carefully, and will not play as often nor as much when he again appears in public.

MR. CROWLEY, the distinguished New York chimpanzee, whose health has been frail for some time, has passed away, and the metropolis mourns, and will not be comforted. He was an uncommonly intelligent fellow, and it will be a difficult task to make his place good, which is more than can be said of many more pretentious bicrural beings. His spirit has gone before, but his body, or the external portion of it, will remain. He will be stuffed.

THE effort being made by the Democrats to show up the Republicans as the "free whisky" party will do very well as a campaign dodge, but the following from the New York Saloon Journal, deploring the growing stringency of temperance legislation, is a frank acknowledgement of the real lay of the land in this matter:—

> It is about time that this disgraceful crusade against the liberty of the citizen should be crushed, and there is no more efficient way than for the friends of liberty and the enemies of sumptuous legislation to rally around the Democratic standard.

VERMONT'S state election Tuesday was a rattling success for the Republicans, who swept the state by a majority of nearly 30,000, the largest on record since the war, and a gain of some 16 per cent over the vote of four years ago. The Democrats and Prohibitionists have lost generally. The state Senate will be solidly Republican, and the House nearly so. The sturdy yeomanry of the Green Mountain state have spoken pretty emphatically in condemnation of Democratic "reform" and free trade tendencies, and the rebuke undoubtedly will be still further emphasized by the voters of Maine next week.

GEN. DRAPER was welcomed home at Milford last Saturday night by some 5000 neighbors and friends, regardless of party. He eschewed politics in his remarks, but told a reporter subsequently that he was not making a raid on the governorship, but had allowed his friends to use his name as a candidate. He was willing to accept a nomination if the convention should so desire. "And if not," he said, "I will march in the ranks as loyally as I would lead the column." Unfortunately it looks now as if the general would have to march in the ranks another year, for Gov. Ames's grip on the party is apparently too heavy to be shaken off this time.

THE Massachusetts Democrats held their state convention at Springfield Wednesday, nominating the following ticket:

For Governor—William E. Russell of Cambridge.
For Lieutenant Governor—John W. Corcoran of Clinton.
Secretary of State—William W. Osgood of Boston.
Treasurer and Receiver-General — Henry C. Thatcher of Yarmouth.
Attorney-General--Samuel O. Lamb of Greenfield.
Auditor--William A. Williams of Worcester.

Mr. Russell is a wide-awake young Democrat, 30 years of age, who has served three terms as mayor of Cambridge. He is a believer in civil service reform, and is reported to be quite un-Democratic in the strictness of his views on the temperance question. The platform strongly indorses the national administration on all points, but goes light on civil service reform, though believing that the president's use of the powers of removal and appointment "has been moderate, just and free from the reproach of excessive partizanship." Tariff reform is advocated strongly, and the Republicans are charged with "seeking the suffrages of the people for its candidates in this election by dishonest cries and fraudulent representations concerning the central issue of the day, the question of tax reduction and tariff revision." The crowning declaration is found in the closing sentence, where the Democrats "promise our support to all well-considered laws for the promotion of temperance, and our hostility at the same time to any and all legislation that violates the cardinal doctrine of personal liberty." This is rich, when it is remembered that Democratic ideas of "personal liberty" have led them to oppose nearly every temperance measure now on the statute book. The convention named John Boyle O'Reilly and George M. Stearns for presidential electors.

Anarchists paraded at Cleveland, Ohio, Monday with a red flag, and when they refused to acknowledge the stars and stripes they were pitched into by honest workmen and given a thrashing, and their flag trampled in the dirt.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

High mass will be resumed at St. Thomas's church next Sunday at 11 a. m.

H. E. Bugbee is canvassing the town for the Personal Memoirs of P. H. Sheridan.

The farmers of Monson and vicinity held a picnic at Forest Lake Garden Wednesday.

W. A. Perry has sold his Commercial street restaurant to L. A. Royce of the Forest Lake Company.

The Block Island train on the New London Northern road will make its last trip of the season next Monday.

The JOURNAL job rooms have received an order from Woolrich & Co. for 100,000 labels for their Ridge's Food.

J. S. Clark is now in charge of the mail transfer team, having completed his duties in the market of F. C. Hatch.

The selectmen held their regular monthly meeting in this village Wednesday afternoon, on account of Labor Day.

The annual parade and inspection of the Palmer fire department will probably take place the latter part of this month.

The law was off on partridges last Saturday, but the leaves are yet too thick on the trees to allow the killing of many birds.

The law on trout took effect Saturday, and the fishermen were seen up to a late hour Friday night with some very good strings.

Prof. G. Braham, oculist, will be at the Nassowanno House next week, where he can be consulted on all cases of defective eyesight.

The Prohibitionists think of having a rally soon, and are looking over the ground with a view to throwing out a banner bearing the names of Fisk and Brooks.

A large number of the Prohibitionists of this town attended the rally of their party at Springfield last evening, and returned by special car attached to a freight train.

An engine-house of the New London Northern road at Brattleboro was burned last Saturday morning, with one locomotive. Loss $18,000, covered by insurance.

Residents at Tenneyville claim that the water in the large pond where the ice-house was recently burned has become so polluted as to produce typhoid fever, and they propose to notify the State Board of Health of the matter.

The Prohibitionists held their congressional, senatorial and county conventions in Springfield yesterday, nominating Frank A. Bowen of Three Rivers for senator, and George F. Wright of this place for county commissioner.

There was a heavy frost in some sections of the town Wednesday night, and a still heavier one last night, which has probably damaged vegetables quite seriously. The mercury was down to the freezing point this morning.

Interest in the proposed lawn tennis tournament seems to have subsided, much to the regret of many, for there are a sufficient number of players in town who express a willingness to enter a tournament. Some definite action will be taken upon the matter soon.

There was a large crowd at the Lake Labor Day, and music for dancing was furnished by the Gilbertville Orchestra. The present season has been much better than the last, and the management looks for still better times next year. There will be no services at the Lake next Sunday.

Complaint continues to be made regarding the sidewalks of Main street, which are nightly obstructed by the crowds that congregate after the hours of labor. Last Friday evening a woman was grossly insulted by an urchin who was afterwards caught and given a severe thrashing. A night patrolman is needed, and a petition will be presented to the town fathers for the appointment of one.

Mrs. Austin Smith, living in the north part of the town on the road to Ware, died of apoplexy at her home about 3 o'clock this morning, at the age of 56. She attended the golden wedding of Mr. and Mrs. John Foster in this village Tuesday evening, and was apparently as well as usual. Yesterday afternoon she visited a sick neighbor some distance from home, and was stricken with the disease while in the carriage on her way back.

The schools of the town commenced Tuesday with a few changes in the old corps of teachers. Miss Hattie Blanchard resigned the wire mill school, and is succeeded by Miss Lucy Naylor. ### A Golden Wedding.

A pleasant social affair was the gathering of about 65 relatives and friends at the residence of John Foster on Thorndike street Tuesday evening to extend congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Foster on the arrival of their 50th wedding anniversary. The guests had all assembled by eight o'clock, at which time refreshments were served, after which appropriate speeches and music were indulged in. A number of friends from Springfield and Warren were present, and contributed much to the pleasantness of the occasion, which was a complete surprise to both Mr. and Mrs. Foster.

The Carpet Mill Strike Ended.

The machinery at the carpet mill was started up yesterday morning, the weavers have gone back to work, and the strike is ended. The weavers gave up their demand to have Broderick taken back, and are granted the advance in prices which they demanded. They have been out four weeks and lost about $1500 in wages, which it will take them over a year to make up out of the advance in pay. For the past few months the mill has not been paying expenses, and the managers would have been glad to shut down for a season some time ago, but out of consideration for the help it was kept running.

A Big Contract.

The Flynt Building and Construction Co. of this place has contracted with the Cook Locomotive and Machine Co. of Paterson, N. J., to erect their entire new plant, at a cost of about $175,000. The main shop is 505 by 123 feet, erecting shop 145 by 95, boiler shop 342 by 94, hammer shop 163 by 60, blacksmith shop 186 by 60, foundry 242 by 123, besides a number of smaller buildings. The above company's business is locomotive building and the building of the famous rotary snow plow which accomplished such wonderful results in clearing the railroad tracks after the blizzard in the west last winter. The plans are made by L. H. Gager of this place, and the plant is similar to the Pond Machine Tool Co's. of Plainfield, N. J., which was planned and built by the same parties last year.

The Republican Rally and Flag-Raising To-Night.

The committee in charge of the Republican rally and flag-raising has worked diligently all the week and the plans are finally perfected. A barge drawn by four horses and containing the Palmer Fife and Drum Corps left here at three o'clock this afternoon for the other villages of the town, to give notification of the event, and there is every indication that a large and enthusiastic crowd will be in attendance. At 7 o'clock a large Harrison and Morton flag will be thrown to the breeze in front of the post office, accompanied by a display of fireworks. The flag bears the portraits of the Republican nominees for president and vice president, and is a handsome one in every respect. At 7.30 Gen. N. P. Banks will deliver an address from the balcony of the Converse House, and there will probably be brief speeches by some of the citizens.

The Town Meeting.

The special town meeting Tuesday afternoon called out only a small number of voters, who chose Rev. F. W. Betts moderator. The article relating to the construction of a sewer from near the house of L. E. Moore on Main street in the Depot village to the river, caused but little discussion, and $1500 was appropriated for it. Under article 9 a new town way in Thorndike was accepted and $400 appropriated for it. Under article 4 a committee of five—Rev. F. W. Betts, Patrick Crowley, H. E. W. Clark, A. P. Trudeau and George Robinson—was appointed to devise some uniform method of beautifying the various cemeteries of the town, and report at the annual meeting next March. The sum of $600 was appropriated for the two new roads laid out on Dewey's hill last spring. It was voted that the money received for the liquor licenses be used for the appropriations made at this meeting, and $200 was voted to extend the Central street sewer in the Depot village. The article to widen the Springfield road west of the school house in Three Rivers was indefinitely postponed, as was also the one relating to the withdrawal of the wire mill property from the fire district.

Assault Upon a Child.

Officer Palmer arrested Charles A. McGaffey of Worcester last Friday evening, charged with an assault of a criminal nature upon the seven-years-old daughter of William Brown a few hours before his arrest, and also on the night preceding, by telling the child that he had some kittens in a barn, which he claimed was located in the vicinity of F. M. Eager's residence, his purpose evidently being to lead the child into the woods; but she became frightened at her assailant's remarks and actions, and ran home, with an alarming story of her escape. The next evening she was sent to the post office, when she was again accosted by the stranger, who this time succeeded in misleading the child by telling her of the kittens he had up in his barn, and other attractions. She accompanied him this time as far as the Universalist church, when his strange actions prompted her to go home, and she cannot be induced to venture out-of-doors alone since. She described her assailant so vividly that it was an easy matter for the officer to identify the fellow, and he was soon found in a saloon. He was arraigned in court Saturday morning, and was sentenced to the house of correction for six months.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union Convention.

The Hampden county convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was held Tuesday in St. Paul's Universalist church, with a good attendance of delegates and others interested in the work. The morning session opened at 9.30 with a devotional service conducted by Mrs. O. C. Marcy of Palmer, after which came an address of welcome by Mrs. C. E. Dewey. The reports of the secretary and treasurer were then read, showing that a new society has recently been formed at Hampden, and that the finances are in as good condition as can be expected. The secretary stated that there are nineteen unions in Hampden county, with over 700 members, and that a majority of these organizations are at present in a flourishing condition. Owing to the vacancy in the board of officers caused by the removal of the president to another place, Mrs. G. F. Eaton of Springfield was nominated to fill the position, the nomination to be confirmed at the state convention to be held at Fall River. Mrs. H. A. Green of Westfield was chosen a delegate to attend the national convention at New York next month, and Mrs. Homer Merriam of Springfield alternate. Mrs. G. F. The afternoon session opened at 2 o'clock with Miss E. S. Tobey of Boston, president of the Massachusetts division of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, in the chair. "The Duty of Women Toward the Public Schools" was opened by Mrs. S. S. Fessenden of Malden, state superintendent of franchise, and thoroughly discussed, after which President Tobey delivered an able address on "White Ribbon Responsibility." The next county convention will be held at Chicopee Falls in December.

Why the Wire Company Wishes to Withdraw from the Fire District.

Editor Journal:—In your issue of Aug. 31 appeared an article signed "Filius," in which he handles the Palmer Wire Mfg. Co. without gloves for wishing to be excluded from the fire district. Situated as it is a full half-mile beyond the limits of the water main, and on ground which some of the firemen claim the steamer cannot be taken to, is it strange that the company should take measures to free itself from paying a tax for that which it is amply able to do with its own force pump, whose capacity for throwing water is more than double that of the steamer, and which can be started at a moment's notice, day or night? Judging the future from the past, the Wire Co. can expect little or no protection from the steamer in case of fire at the mill or surrounding buildings, for twice in the past eighteen months has a call been made for the steamer at the mill, and in neither case did it respond. On the former occasion when a man drove to town saying "the wire mill is all a-fire," the hose company went as far as the Point of Rocks and returned, while the pet steamer remained in its house and the Wire Company's force pump did its good work and saved the mill with very little damage. On the latter occasion, when the fire was in the woods and endangered adjoining property, the alarm was blown by the wire mill whistle and the hook and ladder company responded, but no steamer. Luckily, in this case, it was not needed. "Filius," with magnanimity that is wonderful, says that it "ought not to be many years before the water mains are extended to the wire mill and other out-lying districts," but in the meantime is it policy to crush the life out of the struggling industries that are so unfortunate in their location? He also says that fire alarm boxes ought to be placed near the wire mill as soon as practicable. I would like to ask what for? Does "Filius" think that a few strokes on a church clock bell, if it should happen to work, would bring relief after a continuous blowing of the wire mill whistle or the shouting of a messenger at the top of his voice have failed? Argument is useless. All the Wire Company want is fair play. Give them what they pay for and they will not ask to be excluded from the fire district. But because the company is simply "supposed to be doing a fairly prosperous business," or that the plant is worth more to-day than what they paid for it, is but a poor reason why they should be compelled to pay an exorbitant tax to the fire district for that which is of no benefit to them whatever. O. J. STOCKWELL.

Base Ball.

PALMERS, 8; L. J. GUNNS, 8.

About 300 persons assembled on the park last Saturday afternoon to see the Palmers tie the score with the L. J. Gunn's of Miller's Falls, the ablest team in Western Massachusetts. The visitors had three professional players with them who are well known in the New England league, although now released. The inexcusable error made in the second inning by the Palmers' second baseman lost the game for the home team, and the error made by the visitors' third baseman also prevented the score from reading in their favor. The score follows:

| INNINGS, | 1 | 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 | 9 | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Palmers, | 2 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 3 | 0 | 1 | 2 | 0 | —8 |
| L. J. Gunns, | 0 | 0 | 4 | 0 | 1 | 2 | 0 | 1 | 0 | —8 |

Earned runs, Palmers 3, L. J. Gunns, 3. Total bases, Palmers 8, L. J. Gunns 14. Two-base hits, Shackley, Bruton 2. First base on balls, Mike Rooney. First base on errors, Palmers 11, L. J. Gunns 4. Left on bases, Palmers 6, L. J. Gunns 3. Struck out, by Cotter 4, by Powers 4. Batter hit, Betts, Cotter. Double plays, Cotter and Carney; Byars, Carney and Shackley. Passed balls, Kane 1, Doyle 2, O'Roake 2. Time, 2h 15m. Umpire, F. L. Pierce of Thorndike.

PALMERS, 2; THORNDIKES, 1.

Over 500 people witnessed the most exciting game of the season Monday forenoon between the Palmers and Thorndikes on the grounds of the latter club. The game was called at 10.30, and was the first in the series of three to decide a purse of $100 and the supremacy. It was a faultless game, Cotter of the Palmers striking out 20 men, 12 of them in succession. Riley and Roberts, the Actives' battery of Chicopee Falls, played with the Thorndikes, and gave an exhibition of fine ball playing. The Palmers batted well throughout the game, but not always safely. The umpiring was satisfactory to all. The score:

| INNINGS, | 1 | 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 | 9 | |

Earned runs, Palmers 2. Total bases, Palmers 2, Thorndikes 5. Two-base hit, Shackley. First base on balls, Palmers 2. First base on errors, Palmers 5, Thorndikes 3. Left on bases, Palmers 1, Thorndikes 5. Struck out, by Cotter 20, by Riley 5. Wild pitch, Riley 1. Time, 1h 35m. Umpire, W. A. Fitzpatrick of Palmer.

THORNDIKES, 5; PALMERS, 3.

The crowd on the park in this place in the afternoon numbered 1500, the largest of the season, and also the roughest, the officers having their hands full to prevent rows. The Palmers may have been unable to win the game on its merits, but they think they should not have been compelled to play against ten men, as they claim the umpire was one of the rankest. This is the score, as well as it could be kept:

| INNINGS, | 1 | 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 | 9 | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Thorndikes, | 1 | 0 | 0 | 2 | 0 | 2 | 0 | 0 | 0 | —5 |
| Palmers, | 1 | 0 | 0 | 1 | 0 | 0 | 1 | 0 | 0 | —3 |

Time, 2h 35m. Umpire, Dennis Danihy of Thorndike.

Labor Day was celebrated in this place by a ball game between the Palmers and Thorndikes, which drew out about 1000 people, who saw one of the finest as well as the closest games ever played in town. The battery work of Riley and Roberts was perfect, only one hit being made off Riley's delivery. Cotter did splendid work for the Palmers. The Thorndikes out-batted and out-fielded the Palmers and would have won the game but for an error in the out field. The score was Palmers 2, Thorndikes 1. The Thorndikes went to Palmer in the afternoon and defeated the Palmers by a score of 5 to 3 in a close and exciting game. Flynn and Treahey did good work for the Thorndikes, and the boys played a steady, winning game, notwithstanding the defeat in the morning.

There is considerable feeling between these teams, and when they meet on the diamond there is sure to be a mighty struggle for the mastery.

The East Congregational Sunday-school picnic Monday was a grand success, and was enjoyed by nearly 500 persons. The superintendent, W. E. Hamilton, proved to be a most efficient manager of such an affair, as all seemed well pleased, and there was no accident to mar the pleasure of the little ones. The Ware Cadet Band was there and gave some of its finest selections, although owing to the large number to go, did not get there until past 12 o'clock. After the collation the band was photographed by Eddy.

The twentieth annual meeting of the Hampden Park Association at Springfield will be held Sept. 11–14, and promises to be one of the best in the society's history. The Hampden park races are noted for their hot contests, because the horses which begin the grand circuit races appear at Springfield in the classes where they belong according to the records they have made during the circuit. This regulation tones up their speed decidedly and keeps them down to their best gait. The favorites of the season, "Guy" and "Fred Folger," will appear, together with "Gossip, Jr.," "Rosalind Wilkes," "Jewett," "Prince Wilkes," "Mambrino Sparkle," "Pilot Knox" and "Spofford." The premiums foot up $27,000. The circuit races thus far this year have shown a determination on the part of horse owners to push their steeds for all they are worth, and a good deal of genuine fun is anticipated on Hampden Park. Colt's band of Hartford, one of the finest musical organizations in New England for out-door work, has been engaged.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, Sept. 5, 1888.

The honest seeker for political truth gets staggered very frequently by the diverse testimony which he receives as to the same field of observation from apparently reliable persons. One of the interesting questions of the campaign is whether there is much change of voters from one side to the other. Now I find men who say there is a perfect stampede to Harrison. Some of them say that they know it, and others know of a few cases and apparently generalize from those to the whole Democratic party. From all that I can ascertain, it is probable that these changes are exaggerated. Right on the very ground where the Republican observer finds that lots of men who voted for Cleveland in 1884 will vote for Harrison this year, the Democratic observer, who professes to be more familiar with the voters personally than any other man, says that he can find no changes to Harrison whatever. But he does know of men who voted for Blaine who will vote for Cleveland. Now each of these witnesses has no doubt that his statement is correct. The impartial observer will deduct a good share for partisan bias and will find some basis of fact for each. Naturally it is so, for if men are going to change their political allegiance, the men they would tell of it first would be the men with whom they are going to vote, not the men whom they are going to abandon. So a reasonable explanation of the discrepancy of testimony is that each side hears of its gains, but does not hear as promptly of its losses. Some changes will occur on the part of those who have hitherto been faithful to the old ticket, but I do not see any reason to think that there is going to be a stampede either way, or anything like it.

The developments of the week have put Gen. Draper out of the gubernatorial race, if anything was needed in addition to what was already evident to the observer on the ground here. He stands no chance whatever for the nomination. He has had men at work for him diligently, but they don't seem to have been good managers, and they have not only failed to get a fair showing for the general in the convention, but they have made it doubtful if he can ever get the Republican nomination. It has been attempted to use his military connections for sake of securing the nomination. I know of a member of his old regiment who was written to with an urgent request that he get himself elected as a delegate to the state convention and that then he do all he could for the nomination of the general. No answer was made to the letter and the managers made an opponent where they might at least have avoided any opposition. The veteran had nothing against the general, but he did not like that way of working up a nomination. Mr. Haile's case is generally regarded as linked with Draper's, and his chances are gone this year, but he may stand better next year than Draper.

The action of the Democrats at Springfield to-day will put much life into the state campaign. William E. Russell will stump the state and do the best he can to poll a large vote. His nomination is regarded by leading Republicans as strong, and of course the Democrats say all manner of good things for him. Some of the Western Massachusetts delegates last year, such as Capt. Hill of Easthampton and Major Alvord of Amherst, did all they could for Russell against Lovering, and they are extremely pleased that he is the winner without a contest this year. It is admitted generally that John E. Russell would have been stronger for them, especially with the farmers, but he persistently refused to be a candidate, and there was some opposition to the Cambridge mayor, yet it was unable to unite upon any one and so made no show in the convention. They put it through unanimously for Russell, and those who did not like him made the best of what they couldn't help. Take the state at large, he is undoubtedly strong, and the opposition is local and the grounds of it are not at all discreditable to Russell. I have never heard him make a public speech, but it is said that he is inclined to be monotonous in his efforts. This will be against him, but the consciousness that he has something personally at stake will doubtless make him lively and interesting.

It is interesting at a Democratic convention to see how popular Patrick A. Collins is with the party. He always gets an abundant share of applause. As soon as the crowd sees him it breaks out into hand-clapping, and it misses no good opportunity of showing its esteem. Collins enjoys it, but it never turns his head. He is one of the rising men of the state, and if he would stay in politics he could long hold the seat from the fourth district. But he feels that his law practice is going to pieces when he is in Washington, and that he must come home to save it. It is said that it will take him years to get it back where it was before he went to Congress.

The Massachusetts congressional delegation seems to be all going to pieces this year. Col. Allen's retirement in the Lowell district makes another gap in the Republican ranks. Allen has been a valuable member of the party and is a man of much promise. If he could be persuaded to continue for further service, he would have more prominent committee places than he has had thus far, and he would help well to sustain the reputation of the state on the floor of the lower national house. But, as in Collins's case, his business must be attended to and the state must look for another man. Of those who have been mentioned, it would seem as if Frederic T. Greenhalge was the best fitted for the national service, but there is abundance of good material in the district. A rumor has been set afloat that Gen. Butler will be the Republican candidate. Perhaps his speech in the interest of the Republican party at Tremont Temple last Friday night is regarded as putting him in full membership again, but what a spectacle it would be to see the "old man" running for office again on the Republican ticket. It would be a sight for the whole country.

Both of the political parties are getting out much campaign literature these days. Of course the Home Market Club has the largest demand for its pamphlets. They go all over the country and there is a constant inquiry for them. But the Tariff Reform League and the Young Men's Democratic Club are also very busy, and the latter are getting out several things every week. Their latest document is a tariff primer. It is based on the primer of David A. Wells and has been revised by the executive committee of the club, and in the new form has the approval of Mr. Wells. It has been thoroughly rewritten and brought down to the present campaign. It is a good thing for the public that this vigorous tariff discussion is going on. Perhaps men will be changed from each side to the other yet who now think they are firmly grounded. Never before in the history of campaign literature has there been such a demand for it as there is this year, and though some of it is wasted and used carelessly, yet much of it is sent out in answer to honest requests for light, and will have a decided effect.

The Catholic agitation keeps along, though it is put in the shade by political discussions.

Very Wonderful

are the effects produced by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Sores, Scabs, Glandular Swellings, Boils, Carbuncles, and all kinds of Humors disappear, as if by magic by the use of this STANDARD BLOOD-PURIFIER.

F. C. James, of Albany, Greene County, Tenn., writes: "Ayer's Sarsaparilla saved the life of my only child. When three years old her head was covered with Scrofulous Sores. She became almost helpless. Skillful physicians did all they could to relieve her, but failed. At last I purchased a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, gave it to her according to directions, and she immediately began to improve. Encouraged by the result, I continued to give her this medicine until the cure was complete."

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles $5.

SWIFT'S SPECIFIC
Is entirely a vegetable preparation containing no mercury, arsenic, or other poisonous substances.

SWIFT'S SPECIFIC
Has cured hundreds of cases of epithelioma or cancer of the skin, thousands of cases of eczema, blood humors and skif diseases, and hundreds of thousands of cases of scrofula, blood poison and blood taint.

SWIFT'S SPECIFIC
Has relieved thousands of cases of mercurial poisoning, rheumatism and stiffness of the joints.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., June 27, 1888.—Swift's Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga., Gentlemen: In the early part of the present year, a bad case of blood poisoning appeared upon me. I began taking S. S. S. under advice of another, and to-day I feel greatly improved. I am still taking the medicipe and shall continue to do so until I am perfectly well. I believe it will effect a perfect cure.

Yours truly,
DOC. P. HOWARD,
111 West Sixth St.

COLUMBIA, S. C., July 7, 1888.—The Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga., Gentlemen: I was a great sufferer from muscular rheumatism for two years. I could get no permanent relief from any medicine prescribed by my physician. I took over a dozen bottles of your S. S. S., and now am as well as I ever was in my life. I am sure your medicine cured me, and I would recommend it to any one suffering from any blood disease.

Yours truly,
O. E. HUGHES,
Conductor C. & G. R. R.

WACO, TEXAS, May 9, 1888.—Gentleman: The wife of one of my customers was terribly afflicted with a loathsome skin disease, that covered her whole body. She was confined to her bed several years by this affliction and could not sleep from a violent itching and stinging of the skin. The disease baffled the skill of the physicians who treated it. Her husband finally began giving his wife Swift's Specific, and she commenced to improve almost immediately, and within a few weeks she was apparently well. She is now a hearty, fine-looking lady, with no trace of the affliction left.

Yours very truly,
J. E. SEARS,
Wholesale Druggist, Austin Ave.

Her Slang She Slung.

She was a Boston maid of high degree,
With eyes that shone like incandescent lights,
And just such pouting lips as seems to me
The kiss invites.

I met her on the Common's grassy sod,
Near where the fountain plays in squirtive mood.
She stood reflective, while a plastic wad
Of gum she chewed.

"It's does one good to seek this spot," said I.
"When weary of the city's hum and buzz."
She ceased her waxic pastime to reply:—
"That's what it does."

"This sylvan spot," then softly I averred,
"The foot of man seems almost to defile."
Her voice came sweet as notes of woodlawn bird:—
"Well, I should smile!"

"The balmly breeze whispering overhead
With such enchanting softness kiss the brow!"
In tones of liquid melody she said:—
"You're shoutin' now!"

"And have you noticed, fair one, how each bird Seems here to choose its sweetest vocal gem?"
I dwelt in rapture on her every word:—
"I'm onto them."

"And how the leaves like moving emeralds seem,
When in response to the sweet breeze they shake?"
Her voice came soft as echo from a dream:—
"They take the cake."

"And do you catch the flowers' fragrance sweet
From yonder garden where the wind blows?"
She answered as she viewed my rugged feet:—
"You bet your hose."

"Dost wander often to this sylvan spot,
The dreamy sense of quietude to seek?"
She purled her answer: "Well, I take a trot
'Bout once a week."

In converse sweet I lingered by her side,
And felt that there forever I could dwell,
And as I left her, after me she cried:—
"So long, old fel."

I was not captured by her voice so rich,
Nor with her lovely face so fresh and young,
But by the sweet dexterity with which
Her slang she slung.

TRUE ECONOMY.—It is true economy to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla, for 100 Doses for One Dollar," is original with and true only of this popular medicine. If you wish to prove this, buy a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla and measure its contents. You will find it to hold 100 teaspoonfuls. Now read the directions, and you will find that the average dose for persons of different ages is less than one teaspoonful. This is certainly conclusive and unanswerable evidence of the peculiar strength and economy of Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"I took Hood's Sarsaparilla for loss of appetite, dyspepsia, and general languor. It did me a vast amount of good, and I have no hesitancy in recommending it."—J. W. Willeford, Quincy, Ill.

"I have been troubled by scrofulous affection all my life. It is one of the marked recollections of my boyhood days, and for several years has rendered me unable to labor much. I think Hood's Sarsaparilla, which I have been using at intervals for ten years, is the best thing I have ever taken. I am now 60, and my general health seems better than ever.—H. D. ### The Years Are Passing By.

The years are passing by!
We watch as from an open door
Their passage through time's corridor;
Each shadow, in its falling, slopes
Across the graves of buried hopes;
The pulse of being slower beats
Through winter snows, through summer heats,
And faith and hope and love grow cold
As we grow old, as we grow old!
The years are passing by!

The years are passing by!
Time's record hath such pages blurred,
With hasty deed, with bitter word,
Such sad mistakes mark all life's years
We scarce can read, because of tears,
We see dead faces on the wall,
We hear dead voices in the hall,
We touch some hands on bended knee,
We kiss some lips we cannot see—
The years are passing by!

The years are passing by!
They carry with them as they go
The rain, the sunshine and the snow;
They leave behind the drift of days
Wherein each soul some pennance pays;
Some hopes we have, but not our own!
Some loves we cherish, not alone!
And there are leaves and faded flowers
That tell sad tales in memory's hours.
The years are passing by!

The years are passing by!
The seal of silence on our lips
We closer press. Time's umbra dips
To deeper darkness down the lane
Through which we walk to hide our pain.
We smile and smile as one who bears
A life untouched by grief or cares.
But when in solitude we wait
We bow our heads at Sorrow's gate.
The years are passing by!

The years are passing by!
Another joins the passing band!
Oh! is there not some other land
Where compensation for all ills
The measure of life's being fills?
We wait the answer, but in vain;
The shadow falls; a sense of pain
Rests on us whereso'er we go
And whispers of the sod and snow.
The years are passing by!

WON BY A SCHOOL-MA'AM.

The school directors of district 9, Perry township, were holding a meeting. Nobody would have thought it. The chairman was leaning against his front gate, with his checkered shirt-sleeves turned back and an axe in his hand, surveying the other two members of the board, who stood outside the fence.

It was a meeting, nevertheless, and its object was nothing less important than the selection of a teacher for the fall term.

"Lyman Doty spoke to me about having the school," said the chairman, dubiously.

"Lyman Doty!" exclaimed Steve Tenney, a tall, young fellow, with thick, brown hair, white teeth and a square chin to make up for his lack of downright good looks. "Why, Lyman Doty couldn't teach a baby! He quit school before I did long enough, and he hasn't studied anything but potatoes and winter wheat since, that I know of. Better stick to his farm—eh, Larkin?"

"Guess you're right!" responded the third member of the board, a little man with a cheerful face and a tuft of gray hair sticking straight out from his chin.

And the chairman nodded his agreement.

"Well," continued Mr. Larkin, with an air of importance, "I've had an application that I guess'll suit. It's a sort of relative of my wife's and just as nice a girl as ever was. Smart, too. She got a certificate for two years last examination. She'd make a splendid teacher, Molly Sanborn would."

"Sanborn!" said Steve Tenney, shortly; "any connection of the Sanborns over on the river?"

"That's where she's from," said Mr. Larkin. "She's old John Sanborn's girl—him that died last winter."

Steve frowned. "You won't put her into the school, then, with my consent!" he said, determinedly

"What!" said Mr. Larkin, with a gasp, while the chairman stared.

"What would you think." the young man continued, "if a man sold you fifty head of sheep at a good price and half of them died off in the next week of a disease he must have known beforehand? That was the trick that John Sanborn served on me. And he laughed in my face when I wanted my money back. No, sir! I can't conscientiously consent to putting any of the Sanborns in the school. Bad lot, in my opinion."

Mr. Larkin's small, bright eyes snapped.

"Old Sanborn wasn't too straight, and everybody knows it," he admitted. "But what that's got to do with Molly is more than I can see. She's as fine a girl as you ever set eyes on; not a bit of her father in her."

"Well, well, fight it out between you," said the chairman, good naturedly, and returned to his wood-chopping.

The tall young man and the little old man walked up the street together, talking quite briskly.

Mr. Larkin was hot and indignant; Steve was cool and immovable.

"There don't seem to be any mercy in you," said the former, almost tearfully, as Steve was preparing to turn in at his gate. "If they'd been left well off 't would be different, but they're poor as poverty, and Molly needs the place the worst way."

"You hadn't mentioned that," said the young man, turning back. "If that's the case—"

Mr. Larkin walked away triumphant five minutes later. But Steve Tenney had surrendered with bad grace.

"I couldn't hold out after that, you see," he said to his mother, relating the story over their tea; "but I don't approve of it. There's not much good in the Sanborns, or I lose my guess."

School began two weeks later, when the first cool wave was depopulating front porches and increasing the attractions near kitchen stoves. Steve Tenney held to his opinion concerning the new school teacher and acted accordingly. He did not call at the school house the first day, as was his custom, to leave the register and see if anything was wanted—the chairman having turned these duties over to his younger colleagues. He sent the register by a boy and was utterly indifferent as to whether anything was wanted. He turned the subject when the new teacher was mentioned; and he avoided Mr. Larkin's comfortable home, where the teacher boarded. The little man made him a call, however, a month or so after school had begun.

"Guess you'll have to own up to being in the wrong, Steve," he began. "We hain't had a teacher for years that's given the satisfaction that Molly does. The children rave about her—all of 'em."

But Steve was unimpressed. "My opinion has yet to be altered," he said, rather stiffly.

Mr. Larkin looked discouraged. "She spoke about needing a new broom and a water pail," he said, as he rose. "I told her she'd better come to you about it."

"That school house had a new broom last term and a water pail term before last," said the young director.

Mr. Larkin took a discomforted leave.

The next Sunday evening the young man sitting in a pew of the small church, and allowing his eyes to rove about during the long sermon, suddenly discovered a new face and sat studying it for the remainder of the evening. It was that of a young—not a remarkably pretty—girl, fair and fresh and innocent, with a bright intelligence in her dark eyes and a sweetness in her full lips.

"Who is she?" was his first question after the services were concluded, addressing, as it happened, Mr. Larkin, who had come in late.

"That!" the latter asked, in astonishment. "Why, that is our teacher. That's my wife that's with her, don't you see? I am waiting to take them home."

Steve Tenney found himself wishing quite often after that that the new teacher would come to him about the new broom and pail. Not that he should furnish them if he found they were not needed, but he felt he should not object to an interview with the school teacher. He even mentioned the subject to Mr. Larkin carelessly, when he met him one day.

"Well, you see," was the response, "she sort of hates to come to you. The way you felt about her having the school has got all about town and I s'pose she's heard of it. She can't help what her father was, Molly can't, and she's real sensitive."

The young man look disturbed. That afternoon he left his work at an early hour —not, however, admitting to himself his purpose in doing so—and strolled down the street, turning off—but he pursuaded himself that it was unintentional—in the direction of the school house.

"I might as well go in and see about that broom and water pail, he said to himself, when he stood opposite the little bare looking building. And he went in accordingly

The little teacher looked considerably startled when she opened the door to him. She dropped the spelling book she held, and her voice was hardly steady as she expressed her gratification at seeing him.

Evidently Steve reflected, some idiot had pointed him out to her at church the other evening. He sat down in a front seat, feeling unpleasantly ogerish.

She was hearing the last spelling class. How pretty she looked standing there in her dark-blue calico dress and white apron. What a sweet voice she had, though, putting her "hem, men, pen" to a lot of fidgeting youngsters could hardly show it to the best advantage. When the class was dismissed and the last small student had rushed whooping down the street, the teacher and the young director stood looking at each other with some awkwardness.

"I thought I'd come in," said Steve, at last, apologetically, "and see if anything is needed."

He did not mention the fact of his being some six weeks late in the performance of his duty.

The girl dropped her head timidly. "I—don't think so," she murmured.

"What a brute she must think me!" Steve reflected, with some self-disgust.

He turned carelessly to the corner where the broom stood. "Isn't that pretty far gone?" he asked with a conscious-stricken glance at the stubby end.

And the little teacher nodded.

"Your water pail seems to leak," the young director went on, indicating the empty bucket and wet floor.

"Yes," the girl assented.

"I'll see that you have new ones," Steve concluded.

And he was rewarded by a grateful glance from the teacher's soft eyes as she took her hat from the nail.

He took her basket from her hand as they started away together, and, having taken it, could hardly surrender it short of Mr. Larkin's gate. He was a little reluctant to surrender it even then, for their first awkwardness had quite worn off, their walk had been far from unpleasant, and they were feeling very well acquainted.

He walked home in an agreeable absorption, repeating to himself the things she had said and recalling her pretty way of saying them.

He did not pause to consider that it was old John Sanborn's daughter of whom he was thinking; he was only conscious that she was a bright, young girl, whom it was charming to look at and listen to.

His pleasant mood was rudely interrupted by little Mr. Larkin, who dropped in that evening.

"Lyman Doty couldn't have the school," he observed with a chuckle, "but it looks as though he was going to have the teacher!"

"What?" said Steve, with a sudden unexplainable sinking of the heart.

"He's hanging around considerable, anyhow," said Mr. Larkin. "Went to visit the school last week, and he was asking me to-day whether Molly's got any way of getting home Friday night. He said he just as lief take her as not. Molly generally walks; but I guess she'll be glad of a lift."

"You don't mean to tell me," said Steve, warmly, "that she'd have anything to do with him?"

Mr. Larkin stared. What could Steve care with whom old John Sanborn's daughter had to do? But he only said, depreciatingly: "Well, Lyman is a good steady fellow."

"Humph?" was the scornful rejoinder.

The young man mused long and seriously when his visitor had gone, and went to bed with a lighter heart, having come to a firm conclusion.

When the teacher closed school the next Friday night she was feeling rather worn out, as she was apt to feel at the end of the week, nor did the prospect of the four miles' walk home serve to cheer her. She locked the door and started down the path with a sigh.

A neat little buggy was coming briskly up the road. Molly gave a start as the driver pulled up the horse and jumped to the ground. It was the young director, and he was coming toward her.

"I won't make any excuses, Miss Sanborn," he said, with a humorous solemnity. "I won't say I'm going over the river on business and happened to think you might like to ride. The truth is it's a carefully laid plot. Will you be an aider and abettor?"

The little teacher laughed appreciatingly as he helped her into the buggy and drove leisurely away.

"I must stop at Mr. Larkin's and leave my dinner basket," she said, demurely.

Mr. Larkin was standing at the front gate. He stood staring at the young director, as the latter assisted the teacher to the ground and sat down on the horse block waiting for her.

"Lyman Doty was here after Molly just now," he said, gaspingly. "I sent him down to the school house."

"We met him," said Steve. "You see," he added, making a bold attempt at carelessness, but speaking, nevertheless, in a shame-faced way and avoiding the little man's eye, "you see, I feel as though it's my bounden duty to keep Lyme Doty away from her. Pure impotence, his hanging around here in that way."

The little teacher came tripping back, and the young director's buggy whirled away in a cloud of dust.

"Steve Tenny is taking Molly home [illegible] his buggy," said Mr. Larkin, joining his wife in the kitchen and sinking dazedly into a chair. "I guess the world's coming to an end."

"Steve Tenny ain't a fool," his wife responded, practically. "I knew he'd get over that ridiculous notion of his—and especially after he'd seen Molly."

"Says he's doing it from a sense of duty," said Larkin, chuckling slowly as the humor of the situation dawned upon him. "Wonder how far his sense of duty will take him?"

"I shouldn't be surprised at anything," said Mrs. Larkin, mysteriously.

The Larkins—and, perbaps, Lyman Doty —were the only people who were not surprised when the new teacher gave up the school at the end of the term and was quiet-married to the young director. The chairman of the school board is wondering over it yet.

GOOD HUMOR.

Several years ago the convicts in a large penitentiary conspired together and made an unsuccessful attempt to escape. In the struggle the leader of the prisoners and one of the keepers were killed. The men were secured, but they remained in a gloomy and vindicitive temper for months afterwards.

Stricter discipline was enforced, and then, after some time, kindness was tried to conciliate them. Their rations improved in quality and several new privileges were granted to them; but it was all in vain.

"We are sleeping on a volcano," the warden reported. "They are in a murderous humor."

He then recommended the appointment of a certain Dan Pickerell as assistant warden, the man who held that office being a grim, sarcastic fellow especially disliked by the prisoners. Dan was inexorably firm as an officer, but he was a fat, jolly embodiment of good humor. He exacted every jot and tittle from the convicts; but, that rendered, he took an interest in them, in their rheumatism, in their toothaches, their children, their plans for their life after their discharge.

They were human beings to him, not numbered beasts in cages; he was not afraid to joke and laugh with them. In two weeks' time the men were quiet and contented. Good humor had done its work. The revolt was over.

"Good humor," says a German writer, "is one of the rank and file of human virtues, which we are apt to overlook; but it wins more battles in life than do a mighty intellect or lofty imagination."

Good humor in a house is like the kitchen fire whose praises no poet sings. Wit and fancy are Chinese lanterns brought out when we entertain strangers; but it is this steady fire, after all, that warms and feeds us best.

There is no stronger power than a merry good humor with which to win our way through life. In Æsop's fable both sun and wind tried to rob a traveler of his cloak. The more fiercely the wind blew the closer he held it; but the sun's steady heat made him throw it away of his own will.

Oppose enmity, not with windy argument or abuse, but with sunny good temper, if you would conquer it.—Youth's Companion.

WHAT MORE COULD THEY ASK?—They were outside the garden wall. "Well," ejaculated Eve, who, womanlike, gave her alleged husband the greater share of the blame, "I hope you're satisfied now." "We ought to be my dear," returned Adam, trying to be hilarious under distressing circumstances; "we've got the earth."

Harvesting.

Over the uplands, clear and strong,
Rises the reapers' harvest song.

With whirr of scythe and fall of grain,
There comes a merry, answering strain,

Where Jennie by the pasture rails
Sets down her foam-topped milking pails,

And challenges, with laughter sweet,
"Make room, I come to bind the wheat."

Upon her cheeks the roses bloom,
She brings the clover's sweet perfume,

And farmer Ned, with rustic grace,
Yields to the maid a willing place.

The sheaves are large and fully ripe,
Of two young hearts a fitting type.

As Jennie's unaccustomed hand
Essays to tie the golden band,

The sheaf rebels, and stalwart Ned
Bends down to help; head touches head;

Brown cheek and blushing closely press;
Lips meet in shy but fond caress.

The sun's fire blazes in the west;
A warmer kindles in each breast.

The round sheaf love's elixir quaffs,—
Behind his beard the ripe grain laughs,

Foreseeing when the farmer's board
Heaped high shall be with his rich hoard;

And other lids be fitly fed
With the hale housedames' snowy bread;

For love is strong and love is sweet,
And deftly binds the farmer's wheat.

SINGULAR TENDERNESS OF MR. CORLISS.

Mr. Corliss, the famous engine builder of Providence, not very long before his death had occasion to build an addition to his manufactory—a big ell for additional machinery. To prepare the foundation for this ell it was found necessary to remove a ledge of rock by blasting. The men to do the work on the addition had been employed and put on the pay roll; the materials had been purchased and brought to the building, and the work of blasting had begun. The next morning Mr. Corliss passed by the place where work was proceeding, when the foreman in charge, knowing his interest in pretty things, called him.

"See here, Mr. Corliss," said he, "here's a birds nest that we've found, and that's got to go."

He showed the manufacturer a robin sitting upon the nest that had been built, fast and snug, in a crevice of a rock, among some bushes that grew there. The bird flew off her nest as the men drew near, and showed five blue eggs that looked as if they had just been laid.

"Can we move that nest somewhere else?" asked Mr. Corliss.

"I'm afraid not, sir. We'd tear it to pieces in getting it out, and it isn't at all likely that you could get the bird to go to sitting again anywhere else. We've got to go on, so we might as well rip it out and throw the eggs away."

"No," said Corliss, "we won't disturb her. Let her bring out her brood right there."

"But we'll have to stop the work on the building."

"Let it stop, then"

And so orders were given that operations on the addition should be suspended. They were suspended; and the hands stood still, drawing their pay for doing nothing, or next to nothing, while the robin sat on her nest with her air of great consequence and zealous attention to business, and had her food brought by her mate, and at last hatched her brood. And then there were three weeks more to go by, at least, before the young ones could fly. Corliss visited the nest frequently, not with any uneasiness or impatience to have the robin and young ones out of the way, but with a genuine interest in their growth. The old birds had all the time they wanted; and when at last the had sternly helped the clumsy, reluctant youngsters over the edge of the nest, and they showed themselves able to get about on their own hook, orders were given to resume building operations; and the dull boom of the gunpowder tearing the rocks apart was heard where the birds had peeped.—Boston Transcript.

JUVENILE STRATEGY.

A ten-years-old boy was trundling a two-wheeled cart loaded with laundry work on the sidewalk down State street below Pearl when a policeman approached him pompously and ordered him to roll the cart in the middle of the street. The boy obeyed with ill grace, and the policeman, knowing that the lad would turn up Broadway, hastily went around to that thoroughfare via James street and Maiden lane. He reached the corner of Broadway and Maiden lane just in time to meet the boy, who had again resumed his way on the sidewalk.

"Didn't I tell you to roll that cart in the roadway?" said the "cop," thoroughly angered, as he seized the boy by the collar.

"Yes," replied the boy.

"Well, I'm going to take you in."

"Huh?" querried the boy, not seeming to understand.

"I'm going to take you to the station house," said the policeman.

"Well," said the boy, "go ahead. But if you do you'll wheel that cart with you, for I'm durned if I do."

He was not taken in.—Albany Journal.

THE HORSE MINDS HIS STEPS.—Every one has noticed, while driving, how rarely a horse steps on a stone even when going very rapidly. A writer in Golden Days quotes an old cavalryman that a horse never steps on a man intentionally. It is a standing order with cavalry that should a man become dismounted he must lie down and keep perfectly still. If he does so the entire company will pass over him, and he will not be injured. A horse notices where he is going, and is on the lookout for a firm foundation to put his foot on. It is an instinct with him, therefore, to step over a prostrate man. The injuries caused by a runaway horse are nearly always inflicted by the animal knocking down, and not by his stepping on them.—Washington Star.

THE CATTLE SHOW.

36TH ANNUAL EXHIBITION OF THE EASTERN HAMPDEN AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

NEW ATTRACTIONS A SUCCESS.

TUESDAY—FIRST DAY.

The 36th annual exhibition of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society opened Tuesday morning under most favorable circumstances, the weather being all that could be desired, while the efforts of the directors were untiring in every detail. The attendance throughout the day was somewhat smaller than usual, yet those who did come felt well repaid in seeing the excellent exhibition of neat stock and the unusually good collection of poultry. Two mammoth white geese, owned by Milo Booth of Brimfield, attracted the attention of many visitors, as did also the bronze turkeys and the yellow-duck-winged bantams owned by F. D. Orcutt of Palmer. The large herd of Holsteins were especially admired, among the number being two imported cows owned by Charles E. Dewey of Palmer, while A. F. Smith of Monson exhibited thoroughbreds and ten grades, besides the mammoth bull, "Duke of Monson." The state primary school displayed twenty-seven head of this choice breed, the majority of which were grades. In the pens could be seen some fine specimens of sheep, and the exhibit in this line was fully up to the standard. H. A. Rindge of Monson showed a herd of forty Southdowns and another breed, while J. K. Knox of Palmer showed twenty thoroughbred Shropshires and ten grades. The scarcity of swine was very noticeable. Thomas Moran of Monson and E. F. Henshaw of West Brookfield were the leading exhibitors of milch cows, while in breeding cows D. Morgan & Son of Belchertown were awarded first premium. In the test of working cattle, four years old, attached to a load of 2000 pounds, E. F. Henshaw received first money, but in the test of five-years-old cattle the first prize was awarded to D. Morgan & Son. Following the above came the exhibition of fancy-trained steers, the state primary school being alone in this event, and was awarded the leading premium. In draft and farm work-horses, the state primary school and G. E. & W. M. Tucker of Monson were awarded first premiums in the order named. Many were disappointed in the postponement of the match game of ball between the Palmers and Three Rivers, to the second day, this event coming next on the programme. After the exhibition of steers on the track came the

THREE-MINUTE TROTTING CLASS.

In this event there were six starters, "Robert L.," owned by L. Crawford of Braintree, being assigned first position, with "Leroy," F. L. Sturtevant, Hardwick, second; "Bay Jim," G. Blodgett, Springfield, third; "Clarence," J. W. Beamis, Coldbrook, fourth; "Plough Boy," A. Benson, Brookfield, fifth; "Juno," A. B. Green, Willimantic, sixth. After much monotonous scoring "Clarence" had the lead at the word, with "Juno" a close second, who passed "Clarence" at the first quarter turn and headed the procession all the way around, coming under the wire a winner of the heat with "Clarence" second, "Robert L." third, "Plough Boy" fourth, "Bay Jim" fifth and "Leroy" sixth. In the second heat "Clarence" had the lead at the word, but was passed by "Juno" on the first quarter, as the former went off his feet badly and dropped back to third position, but soon regained first, then back again, while "Juno" settled down into honest trotting and went under the wire in the last half a winner of the second heat, with "Clarence" second, "Bay Jim" third, "Robert L." fourth, "Leroy" fifth and "Plough Boy" sixth. The third was practically a repetition of the first, "Juno" proving an easy winner. The summary:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| "Juno," b.m., | 1 | 1 | 1 |
| "Clarence," b.g., | 2 | 2 | 3 |
| "Leroy, b.g., | 6 | 5 | 2 |
| "Robert L., b. g., | 3 | 4 | 4 |

THE MEMBERS' TROTTING CLASS

was next called, and there were nine entries, the horse trotting a mile heat nearest to 3½ minutes being declared the winner. Dr. John Wilbur of Palmer took first money, Luther Crawford of New Braintree second, G. L. Rindge of Wilbraham third, Charles E. Fuller of Palmer fourth. Time, 3:30¼.

The judges were H. P. Holden, Thomas Blanchard and C. L. Alexander.

WEDNESDAY—SECOND RAY.

The heavy rain which fell the most of the forenoon marred Wednesday's programme of events, and the attendance was comparatively small throughout the day, as many dared not venture out-of-doors for fear of rain, which fortunately ceased falling about 10 a. m. The arrival of the Ware Cadet Band enthused the discouraged ones, and the directors were the next to wear smiles upon their faces when Old Sol's rays were seen once more.

The first event on the morning's programme was the exhibition of colts four years old and under, the first premium being given Walter Green of Wilbraham, while Richard Fridag of Monson was awarded first money in the three-years-old class, and in the two-years-old class first money was awarded H. P. Holden of Palmer. Some fine stallion colts were next shown, the committee giving first premium in the two-years-old class to Dr. John Wilbur of Palmer, and in the four-years-old class to Luther Crawford of New Braintree. The matched pairs of carriage horses were then called up, but as Luther Crawford was the only exhibitor the committee awarded him a gratuity. Following the above occurred the exhibition of single carriage horses on the track, there being ten entries but only seven contestants. The first premium in this was awarded Charles E. Fuller of Palmer, second to G. C. Flynt of Monson, and third to Dr. John Wilbur. The next events on the programme were the match game of ball between the Palmers and Three Rivers, and the gymnastic exercises by the children of the state primary school, but both of these were abandoned for want of time, and the judges called up the members' walking and trotting match, for horses without record, the conditions requiring each horse to walk once around the track, then after passing under the wire trot once around, the three horses coming in first to be declared the winners of $5, $4 and $3. H. A. Northrop secured first money, J. W. Weeks, Jr., second, and Charles E. Fuller third. In the

2.45 TROTTING CLASS

for a purse of $125, divided, there were four entries but only three starters, "Leroy," owned by F. L. Sturtevant, Hardwick; "Juno," A. B. Green, Willimantic; "Ned," J. W. Weeks, Palmer. At the word "Ned" had the pole and the lead, with "Juno" close behind at the first quarter turn and "Leroy" a half a length in the rear. "Ned" broke badly at the first half turn, and by honest trotting "Leroy" shot ahead of the others and passed under the wire a winner of the heat, with "Juno" second and "Ned" third. The second heat was again led by "Ned" at the word, "Juno" second and "Leroy third, but before the first half turn was reached "Ned" broke and "Juno" went ahead and came in on the last half neck and neck with "Leroy," and by a pretty spurt went under the wire about half a length ahead. The third and fourth heats were repetitions of the first. The summary:

| | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| "Leroy," b.g., | 1 | 2 | 1 | 1 |
| "Juno," b.m., | 2 | 1 | 2 | 2 |
| "Ned," b.g., | 3 | 3 | 3 | 3 |

Time—2.44½, 2.44¼, 2.45.

2.30 TROTTING CLASS

for a purse of $175, divided. In this event there were three starters, "Claremont," owned by Swan brothers, of Athol, being assigned first position with "Belle Jefferson," A. B. Green, Willimantic, second, and "Jack Shepard," E. F. Bass, Springfield, third. At the word "Claremont" had the lead with "Jack Shepard" second and "Belle Jefferson" a close third, and it was a close race all the way, but "Jack Shepard" maintained the lead until after the wire had been passed. The second heat gave "Jack Shepard" the lead with "Claremont" second. All three were neck and neck on the first quarter, but "Jack Shepard" increased his speed steadily and soon led the race the remainder of the way, passing under the wire about a half length ahead of "Claremont." In the third heat "Jack Shepard" had the lead at the word, with "Belle Jefferson" and "Claremont" a half length behind, neck and neck, but "Belle Jefferson" broke at the first quarter turn and "Claremont" went into second place, which positions were maintained until the last half, when "Claremont" and "Jack Shepard" had a pretty race to the wire, the latter winning by a length. The summary:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| "Jack Shepard," b g., | 1 | 1 | 1 |
| "Claremont," c.g., | 2 | 2 | 2 |
| "Belle Jefferson," g.m., | 3 | 3 | 3 |

Time—2 35, 2.35, 2.35¾.

The judges were H. P. Holden, Andrew Pinney and C. L. Alexander.

IN THE HALL.

The exhibition in the lower hall this year compared favorably with preceding years, notwithstanding that rain interfered with a well-arranged programme. The leading exhibitor in fruit was G. H. B. Greene of Belchertown, who showed eighty different varieties of apples, thirteen of pears, twelve of peaches, eight of plums, five of grapes, while in vegetables the displays made by Ruggles Brothers of Three Rivers, the Town of Monson, Geer Brothers of Belchertown and the state primary school were all exceptionally good. There was a scarcity of cut flowers, but what there were on exhibition were pretty. O. D. Wells showed some mammoth potatoes, as did also the state primary school. The visitor to the upper hall could find enough to attract the mind and eye for a time, although the display of fine arts and needlework was small. The crayon drawing by Miss Annie Shaw of Pharoah's horses and the oil paintings by Miss Effie Shaw, Mrs. L. E. Chandler, Miss Hattie Lacey of Palmer and Mrs. J. S. Keep of Monson are worthy of special mention, while the 165 different samples of crocheted edgings exhibited by Mrs. J. F. Holbrook of Palmer, and an old-fashioned bedspread over 100 years old, attracted much attention. Mrs. E. L. Davis of Palmer had a fine display of fancy work, as did also Miss Idella Holbrook, though in this line Miss Emma Feeney was the leading exhibitor, and her work was especially commended by all who inspected it. The toys exhibited by Arthur C. Andrews of the state primary school were novel in their make-up and showed no little skill on the part of the maker.

FAIR NOTES.

The races at Springfield attracted a good many visitors Wednesday.

Games of chance were numerous on the grounds, and many a poor "sucker" was caught.

Smoking on the grand stand should not be allowed; it is very disagreeable to ladies occupying seats there.

The merry party in J. W. Weeks's tally-ho coach attracted a good deal of attention Wednesday afternoon, as did also J. S. Holden's tandem turnout.

The total receipts from all sources this year were $830.92, which is about $300 less than last year. The premiums will be ready for payment about October 25.

One cause of the slim attendance was the lack of advertising matter. The posters were not sent out until a short time before the fair, and there were many persons not five miles away who did not know the days on which it was to be held.

The ball games for both days were advertised in good faith, and the absence of these attractions was not the fault of the directors. At the last moment the team which had agreed to play Tuesday sent word that they could not come, and the rain Wednesday prevented the game on that day.

J. H. Woolrich exhibited one of the best breeding cows on the grounds, but in some way the animal was not seen by the committee until after the awards were made.

GOV. AMES secured the coveted renomination by the Republican state convention Wednesday without any trouble, receiving 859 votes to [illegible]90 for Gen. Draper. Treasurer Beard's retirement to run for Congress gave Editor Marden of Lowell a good chance to display his popular qualities, and he won the nomination for treasurer by a vote of 523, to 211 for Wm. E. Blunt, 125 for Jacob A. Dresser and 106 for E. C. Milliken. The ticket is as follows:—

For governor—Oliver Ames of Easton.
Lieutenant-governor—John Q. A. Brackett of Boston.
Secretary of state—Henry B. Pierce of Abington.
Treasurer—George A. Marden of Lowell.
Auditor—Charles R. Ladd of Springfield.
Attorney-general—Andrew J. Waterman of Pittsfield.

George D. Robinson of Chicopee and William F. Draper of Hopedale are the electors at large. The platform pronounces strongly in favor of submitting to the people a prohibitory constitutional amendment.

The Republican Rally.

The Republicans fired the first gun of the campaign here last Friday evening in ratification of the national ticket. At the appointed time the drum corps left for the other villages of the town to apprise the voters and others of the event, and a large crowd responded. The evening's programme was somewhat marred by the announcement that Gen. N. P. Banks, the orator of the occasion, had missed his train at Boston and would not arrive until 9.32 p. m., so Col. J. G. Crawford of Clinton, who was visiting here, consented to act as substitute, and spoke for over half an hour, contrasting the conditions and opportunities of the laboring classes under the rule of free-trade England and that of protective America. He also called the attention of the young voters to that tariff problem which proposes to reduce the duty on many articles of foreign manufacture, and in conclusion showed how much cheaper the laboring men could buy the necessaries of life under the protective tariff than under free-trade laws, and how much better protection will be for American industries. A fine Harrison and Morton flag was run out in front of the post office amid mild cheering and a display of fire-works. Cheers were given for the Republican standard-bearers and the speaker in attendance, after which the committee went to the union station to greet Gen. Banks, who was escorted to the Converse House, where he occupied quarters for the night and returned to Waltham the following morning.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND'S formal letter of acceptance was finally published on Monday, and was followed by Gen. Harrison's on Wednesday. Mr. Cleveland has nothing to say this time about the "temptation to retain public office once gained," but devotes himself mainly to the tariff question, defending himself against the charge of advocating free trade, and yet reaffirming the purpose of his party to "free from duty the imported raw materials" without distinction. Gen. Harrison also gives considerable space to the tariff. "It is not a contest between schedules, but between wide-apart principles," he says; and again: "The important question is not so much the length of the step as the direction of it." Both letters will repay a careful reading.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, Sept. 12, 1888.

The Republican state convention to-day has been enthusiastic and harmonious. It was long drawn out, but the results will be acceptable in the main to the party, and it will be united in the support of the ticket from now till November. The contest for the first place on the ticket was not so great as predicted by the Draper men. Last night they would not hear to anything under 400 for their favorite on the first ballot, but when the votes came to be counted they stood Ames 859 and Draper 290. The total of votes never is equal to the total of delegates reported to be in the convention. A full convention would have been 1227, and the committee on credentials reported that 1215 were present. But the ballot just mentioned does not foot up to that amount, and the total vote cast for treasurer was 967. The object of the Draper men in asking for a formal ballot was to give the general a start in the race next year, but it does not yet appear that they did so. To be sure, they have put him before the public and it has been proved that he had 290 friends who preferred him to Ames. But that does not make him at all a formidable candidate for next year, if either Crapo, Brackett, Loring or Whiting enter the field against him, and it is said now that it is possible that each of these gentlemen has gubernatorial aspirations. Brackett has many active friends, and the move for him is likely to be organized as soon as that for any of the men mentioned.

The race for treasurership was well contested, and ex-Speaker Marden is to be congratulated on the good luck which he had. He did not begin his work and had no intention of entering the field till Monday of this week. But he counted on his wide acquaintance with the politicians of the state to carry him through, and this reliance, plus some very shrewd work, was not in vain. He has a good head for figures, and will without doubt fill the office acceptably and ably. Blunt of Haverhill and Milliken of New Bedford wanted the place badly, and each had his headquarters designated by big placards in the Tremont House, but they could not buck against the popularity of Marden successfully. By general consent, the fittest man for the place who was mentioned was Jacob A. Dresser of Boston, but he did nothing for himself and nobody organized for him, so he had only 125 votes. Even then he was ahead of Milliken. He did not even have ballots printed for him. In politics, it is pretty evident that if a man plants himself on the platform that the office should seek the man, not the man the office, he is pretty sure of being beaten. The cases where this does not happen are very rare according to my experience. It should be said that the convention was very enthusiastic, and that the delegates have full confidence in the result of the election.

They enjoyed heartily the speech of John D. Long. It was full of the sharpest denunciation of the Democratic party, and of praise for the Republicans. He delivered it in his very best manner, slowly and effectively, making himself heard all over the hall, and giving full emphasis to his well-turned sentences. He was especially severe on the president, and used the most severe language to characterize his administration. His allusions to Harrison and Morton were received with tremendous enthusiasm, and so was the mention of Blaine. Indeed, it appeared from the volume of the applause that Blaine was the chief favorite of the party. Chairman Burden of the state committee made mention of the news from Maine, at the beginning of his brief speech, and it brought down the house. In short the party was united and will evidently work with high courage from now till November, with full confidence of carrying the country.

The Prohibitionists have had their convention in Worcester to day, but they have to play second fiddle in the news to the larger party. They do not expect to increase their vote of last year appreciably, for they recognize the fact that many who vote with them in an off year will vote with the Republicans in a presidential year. Then, too, the position of the Republican party in favor of the submission of the prohibitory amendment to the people will hold many in the party who would go with the third party if the Republicans had not taken this position.

At the different political headquarters things are lively, and will be so from now till election. Most of the work which makes any show consists in sending out campaign documents. The Home Market Club continues its work of this sort for the Republicans, and the regular Democrats, the Young Men's Democratic Club and the Massachusetts Tariff Reform League do the distribution on the side of tariff reform. But it is probable that the labors of the Home Market Club alone are more effective than the exertions of its three opponents combined. It has the advantage of organization of the Republican city and town committees all over the state, and of the Republican clubs also. To be sure, the Democrats have the use of their local committees, but they do not seem to have the push and system about their work that their opponents do. It looks, from all I can gather from visits to the different headquarters, as if most of the solid work was being put in by the Republicans. The others may get well at work later in the campaign, but the Republicans have a splendid start which will count for much in the election. The Democrats are relying upon party pressure to bring their voters into line at last.

The congressional contests are becoming interesting and important. They are interesting because things are lively and we are all interested when we see a lot of politicians hustling about to beat each other. They are important because they affect the political complexion of the next House of Representatives. In the first district, if the efforts of ex-Senator Randall for the nomination should be successful, there is a probability that the Republicans will vote for an independent candidate, thus making it possible for the Democrats to elect their man, or the dissatisfied Republicans may vote for the Democrat outright. In the second district Dr. Burden and Councilor Morse are having a regular tussle, and it looks as if the councilor had the game, but there they will not be split after the convention, and there is no prospect that a Democrat could run in on account of dissatisfaction. In the third district it is expected that Treasurer Beard will be the nominee, and he as confidently expects to be elected. This is Congressman Morse's district, and he would like well the glory of defeating Beard. The district has more tariff reformers than any other in the state, according to the number of Republicans, and they might be disposed to oppose Beard, who is well known to be a high protectionist. Gen Banks is expected to be the nominee in the fifth district, but it is likely that the objection to his age will make an opponent appear in the field against him. There is no opposition to Lodge or Cogswell.

LANDON.

The secretary of the Bay State fair, which opens at Springfield October 4, finds by the entries already made that the finest exhibition of cattle, horses, sheep and swine ever attempted in New England is assured. But the entries from this part of the state are not as large as they should be, and hence the time has been extended to Saturday, the 15th. Any live stock entries mailed to the Secretary, Winslow S. Lincoln, 231 Main street, Springfield, or at Worcester, on that day will be in time for acceptance. There are a good many notable animals in this county not yet entered, the owners of which should lose no time in placing them in good company. The executive committee of the fair have added a class for trotting stallions and their progeny, with the same line of premiums as are offered for thoroughbreds. The entries for implements and machines close on the 20th, and for the remaining classes of the exhibition October 3.

The Great Secret

Of exceptionally long and abundant hair may never be solved; but that Ayer's Hair Vigor preserves the hair in all its beauty and luxuriance, and even restores it, when thin and gray, is

WELL KNOWN.

P. J. Cullen, Saratoga Springs, N. Y., writes: "My father, at the age of fifty, lost all the hair on the top of his head. After one month's trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor, the hair began coming, and, in three months, he had a fine growth of hair of the natural color."

J. T. Gibson, 96 Hope-st., Huntley, Staffordshire, Eng., writes "I have seen young men in South Australia quite gray, whose hair has been restored to its natural color after using but one bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor."

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., June 27, 1888.—Swift's Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga., Gentlemen: In the early part of the present year, a bad case of blood poisoning appeared upon me. I began taking S. S. S. under advice of another, and to-day I feel greatly improved. I am still taking the medicine and shall continue to do so until I am perfectly well. I believe it will effect a perfect cure.

Yours truly,
DOC. P. HOWARD,
111 West Sixth St.

COLUMBIA, S. C., July 7, 1888.—The Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga., Gentlemen: I was a great sufferer from muscular rheumatism for two years. I could get no permanent relief from any medicine prescribed by my physician. I took over a dozen bottles of your S. S. S. and now am as well as I ever was in my life. I am sure your medicine cured me, and I would recommend it to any one suffering from any blood disease.

Yours truly,
O. E. HUGHES,
Conductor C. & G. R. R.

WACO, TEXAS, May 9, 1888.—Gentleman: The wife of one of my customers was terribly afflicted with a loathsome skin disease, that covered her whole body. She was confined to her bed several years by this affliction and could not sleep from a violent itching and stinging of the skin. The disease baffled the skill of the physicians who treated it. Her husband finally began giving his wife Swift's Specific, and she commenced to improve almost immediately, and within a few weeks she was apparently well. She is now a hearty, fine-looking lady, with no trace of the affliction left.

Yours very truly,
J. E. SEARS,
Wholesale Druggist, Austin Ave.

Her Weakness.

She's as dainty as a fairy,
And her notions light and airy,—
Full of grace,—
Make me quite forget my duty,
Facinated by the beauty
Of her face.

Witchingly she charms me to her
Till I know I must woo her,—
Make her mine.
For the world is dark without her,
And I long my arms about her
To entwine.

She's a veritable daisy,
And with love she's set me crazy,
It would seem;
Still I feel I must flee her,
For I shudder when I see her
Eat ice cream.

AMONG THE PARAGRAPHERS.

The man who's on the ocean
And seasick in his birth
Amid the storm's commotion
Is the man who wants the earth.

If you give a bow-legged man his choice between a horse and a bicycle he will take the horse every time, because he is built that way.—Hotel Mail.

An exchange tells of the finding of the nude body of a man who gave two gasps and then died. This a case where a pair of pants could not serve as raiment.

Mr. Cleveland brought back from his Virginia fishing trip a lot of bullrushes and wild flowers for Mrs. Cleveland. Perhaps he hopes he will find a little Moses in the bullrushes.—Springfield Union.

He—"And suppose while sitting serenely here some one should be wicked enough to steal a kiss?" She—"I should certainly scream for help." (The steal follows.) She—"Carlo, lie down and be still."—Time.

Chicago Citizen (to lawyer)—"Why do charge me $200 for a divorce, Mr. Blank? It only cost me $5 to get married." Lawyer—"Why do you pay $200 for a diamond and $5 for a Rhine stone."—New York Sun.

A Morning Call. Tobbley (bashfully, and removing his hat spasmodically)—"Is Miss Tremmer in?" Maid—"She is, but she's engaged." Tubbley (who settled things last night)—"I know it—I'm the man."—Time.

"Zantippe," said Socrates one evening after the usual curtain lecture, "I wish you to distinctly understand that while I admire your democratic principles, I don't like your free tirade."—New York Morning Journal.

Saratoga Belle—"You would scarcely believe it, Mr. Oldboy, but the lady seated near the open window has over two hundred dresses." Mr. Oldboy—"Is it possible? Why doesn't she put one of 'em on!"—New York Sun.

In Mexico the young ladies give a few drops of their blood as a charm to the young men. In this country the young men prefer to "bleed" the old man and taste the girl's breath and sample her complexion.—Arcola Record.

"Of all seasons of the year, Dr. Diagnosis," she said to a young physician who was helping her look at the moon, "which do you most prefer?" "I think I prefer the watermelon season," he replied in a low business tone of voice.—The Epoch.

By Express. Infatuated Youth (after three hours' visit)—"Miss Maud, I must go." Infatuated Maiden—"Well, Charley; but you will call again soon, I hope." Infatuated Youth—"I will be back again in fifteen minutes."—Detroit Free Press.

Inherited Traits. Bluffins (wrestling with his infant)—"My dear, I never knew before how much Florinda takes after me." Wife—"Takes after you! How?" Bluffins—"Well, to begin with, she has my hair—ouch!"—San Francisco Examiner.

Robinson—"I say, Dumley, that umbrella I lent you last week I saw Jones carrying this morning." Dumley—"You don't say so! I let Smith take it yesterday, and he must have loaned it to Jones. That man Smith can't be depended upon."—The Epoch.

First Liar—"Talking about rare coins, my brother Sam has one of the original pieces for which Joseph was sold by his brethren." Second liar—"That's nothing. I've got an uncle who owns the identical ladder Jacob saw in his dream."—Texas Siftings.

Young Darwin (in Park row restaurant)—"Aw, have you ice cream, waitah?" Waiter (indulgently)—"Aye, aye, sir, what flave?" Young Darwin—"Aw, pistache, tutti fruti and bisque." Waiter—"Aye, aye, sir; will you have sleigh bells with it?"—Time.

Edith (at Sylvan Beach)—"I should think you would be afraid to go rowing on the lake, Bessie, with such a bow-legged little fellow as Mr. Hobson." Bessie—"Not at all, Edith. Why, you have no idea how nicely his legs balance the boat."—Utica Observer.

"Had your vacation yet, Johnson?" "Yes, four weeks—nice quiet time." "Queer. Seems as if I had seen you around town all summer." "Oh, I've been here, but my daughter has been off. The piano hasn't been opened for four weeks."—Springfield Union.

"Did her father actually thrust you off the stoop, Mr. Noodle!" said the lawyer. "Yes, sir; it broke my heart." "Well, you have my sympathy. If it had broken your leg instead of your heart you could have sued him. Some men never have any luck."—Harper's Bazaar.

He (at the Boston ball grounds)—"Are you interested in base ball, Miss Penelope?" She—"Only mildly so." He—"Isn't that Kelley at the bat?" She—"Yes; and he's made a hit, (excitedly). Oh! watch how beautifully he picks up his feet, and is sliding for second. (Shouting) Good boy, Kelley."

Philadelphia Aunt (severely)—"As I glanced into the parlor, last evening, I saw you with a young man's arm around you." Chicago Niece (calmly)—"Yes, aunty, I was waiting for you to pass the door to see us. Young men are very slippery now-a-days, and one can't have any too many witnesses."—Philadelphia Record.

Miss Flumsy—"Did I understand you to say that your husband was a member of nineteen benefit societies?" Mrs. Rumsy—"Yes, the dear man! he's so thoughtful about us should he die." Mrs. Flumsy—"Well, I guess he'll die before long. Bless us and save us! Think of it! How can he stand it to be out nineteen nights in a week."—Stray.

A FAIR TRIAL OF HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA

for scrofula, salt rheum, or any affection caused by impure blood, is sufficient to convince any one of the superior and peculiar curative powers of this medicine. The following statement is right to the point.

"My daughter Mary was afflicted with scrofulous sore neck from the time she was 22 months old till she became 6 years of age. Lumps formed in her neck, causing great annoyance, and two of them, after growing to the size of a pigeon's egg, broke and discharged. One became a running sore for three years. We thought we would give Hood's Sarsaparilla a thorough trial. We began with it in January, and in a few months, after she had taken five bottles, all supperation had ceased. We then waited three months, when, as a new lump was beginning to form, we again gave her Hood's Sarsaparilla. After she had taken less than two bottles the lump and all indications of scrofula had entirely disappeared, and now she seems to be a healthy child."—J. S. Carlile, Nauright, N. J.

My Mother.

Old and wrinkled, with silvery hair,
And eyes bedimmed with the touch of time,
My mother sits in her old arm-chair,
Weaving threads of gold with her autumn rime.
Once my mother was young and fair,
When the woodlark warbled her wedding chime.

And she ofttimes speaks of the quaint old ways
Of the long ago, and catches gleams
From the summer-land of her vanquished days,
Through the mists of years, till the present teems
With scenes that gladden her childish gaze
And forms that peopled her youthful dreams.

The old log house, with its homely cheer,
She remembers well, and how, when a child,
She strayed to her father's clearing near
O'er a corduroy road, through forests wild—
A way that grew fairer year by year
Till fields of plenty beside it smiled.

She recalls the preacher, rigidly brave
To battle with creeds and foes unseen,
The quaint old church, with its echoing nave,
Its old-time choir, and Sabbaths serene;
While summer flew over the preacher's grave
And the site of the church spreads a mantel of green.

She sits with her knitting and heedeth not
The ways of the world that come and go,
Its murmurs of strife are scarcely caught
From the far-off tides that ceaselessly flow.
Home is her world, in a lowly lot;
Her crown was won where the daisies grow.

And I am the hero of that world,
The genius of all whom her minstrels sing—
I, so nameless, an atom swirled
In the throng, where the deeds of the great scarce ring;
For me love's banner is gently unfurled—
I am the hero, I am the king.

Old and wrinkled! Those lines of care
Were written for me; there is wealth untold
Blossoming out from her silvery hair,
Better to me than houses and gold.
Once my mother was young and fair,
God bless her now she is wrinkled and old!

DIGBY'S REFORM CLUB.

There was a quartette of free and jovial spirits in Burville, and Johnny Digby was acknowledged leader thereof. Peter Slade, Tom Lowden and Sam Pepper were his associates. There were four young men, free-hearted and generous, with great capacity for enjoyment.

On a certain Monday evening they were assembled in a small parlor of Lushton's tavern for the purpose of having a good time, as they were wont to assemble often. The season was winter, and the beverage they were indulging in was a compound of rum, sugar, milk and eggs, familiarly known as "Tom and Jerry."

At the early stage of the wassail, before sense had been submerged, Peter Slade suggested that he had a complaint to make against one of the dignitaries of the town, and thereupon he opened his vials of denunciation against Parson Meekly, the old clergyman of the place. "As near as I can find out," he said, "the parson just about the same as called by name and held us up as a set of graceless scamps."

"Not quite so bad as that," said John Digby. "He did certainly allude to us very plainly, but the worst he brought against us was that we were prostituting noble powers and opportunities to base and sinful purposes. Rather flattering, I thoug—especially the noble powers."

"Flattering with a vengence," said Tom Lowden. "What business is it of his?"

"Aye," exclaimed Sam Pepper, "what business is it of his? And then look at the hullabaloo they make over this foreign mission business. It was in connection with that that Parson Meekly attacked us. They'd better look at home. I think there is suffering enough under our very noses that had better be looked to first."

"That's so," cried Slade. "I say charity begins at home. What do you say, John?"

John Digby had listened attentively, and during the conversation he had turned his glass bottom side up on the table.

"There may be truth in what you say," he slowly and thoughtfully replied, "but people who live in glass houses shouldn't throw stones. We may object to furnishing money for these foreign missions upon the plea that charity begins at home, and all that, but the question may come back. What have we done for this charity at home? What have we done towards alleviating the distresses of the poor of our town? And if we haven't done anything in that direction—if we don't open our hands in charity at all—what right have we to say in what direction others shall aim their good works?"

Blank were the looks that greeted this speech. The trio of listeners were taken back. They hadn't expected this from their leader.

"Now look here, boys," continued John Digby, pushing his inverted glass away to the center of the table, and leaving it there. "I don't like this overhauling that Parson Meekly gave us any better than you do, and I propose to shut him up."

"Hi-yah!" shouted Sam Pepper; that's the talk. I am with you."

"Are you sure you have got the courage, Sam?"

"Yes, sir."

"Count me in," said Tom.

"And me," added Pepper. "Let's shut the old fellow up. What's the programme, Jack?"

"Well," answered Digby, "I have planned that we shall take the wind out of Parson Meekly's sails by establishing a reform club of our own, and starting a missionary society on the same basis."

"Eh?"

"Look ye, boys; people besides the parson are talking hard about us, and we'll shut them all up in a lump. I'd like to hit back in the most effective way, I'd like to make them take the back track here in Burville in their own business."

His hearers were interested and listened eagerly.

"What is it? Tell us how this is to be done?"

"Have you the courage to do it?" said John.

"We'll follow you," said Peter Slade.

"Honor bright?"

"Yes."

"Then listen."

"Hold on," cried Sam Pepper. "Let's fill up before we commence."

"Not with old Lushton's Tom and Jerry," returned Jack. "We shall want the cost of it for another purpose. Turn the glasses bottom side up for the present. Now listen. We are in the habit of meeting here at the tavern three evenings in a week; and our expenses for liquors and cigars are at least two dollars an evening, ain't they!"

This was admitted by a nod.

"And in addition to this I spend at least a dollar more a week for beer and tobacco on my own hook. How is it with you?"

The others admitted that a dollar a week was little enough.

"Thus," resumed John Digby, "we have ten dollars a week as the result of our combined and individual expenses for rum and tobacco. I, for one, think I could manage to live through the rest of the winter without any more of it; and for the sake of the experiment I would be willing to put my share of that ten dollars to charitable uses. Here it is the beginning of December, and the winter has opened hard. There are poor families not far away which we can bless with our sympathy and help. We might organize a benevolent society, or a missionary society, on our own hook. Do you begin to understand?"

They understood him perfectly; and since he would lead they were ready to follow.

In fact they rather liked the idea. There was a charm of novelty and originality about it that captivated them. It would be fun to purchase flour and meat and tea and sugar and fuel, and go around to assist the poor and needy. They were young men, full of life and good feeling, and had caroused only because of the fun of the thing. Here was promise of fun in another direction, and they would go into it.

The matter was discussed and finally settled. They would make a square week of it at the beginning.

"During the week," said Jack, "we will look up the cases of destitution and suffering, and on next Saturday afternoon we will meet and compare notes. Then we will take our ten dollars and do what we can for those who are suffering most. We must be methodical in this. We are not to spend a penny in this work of charity that is not saved by cutting off some useless expenditure of our own; and he of us who buys a cigar during the week shall deduct it from his contribution on Saturday.

"If we should be methodical," suggested Peter, "we must organize. I say if we are going to do anything of this kind, let us do it shipshape."

Peter's proposition was unanimously accepted, and they proceeded to organize.

The organization arrived at was simple, but nevertheless effective. They elected John Digby to serve as president, and as treasurer, and as secretary; and then they elected an executive committee of four, consisting of John Digby, Peter Slade, Tom Lowden and Sam Pepper.

And then they settled their bill at the bar and went home.

Saturday evening came, and the reform club met at Digby's shop, and each member was ready with his report. They were sober and thoughtful. They had thought when they separated on Monday evening they should meet with a spirit of frolic in their new work; but the scenes which they had witnessed in the interim had changed the current of their feelings entirely.

"My soul!" exclaimed Sam Pepper; "I never dreamed what sorrow and suffering there was here in our little town. Last night I went to the Widow Bashlot's, and I found her with a sick child, absolutely freezing and starving."

"And I," said Tom Lowden, "I found poor Uncle Ben Driscoll and wife both in the same plight. The old man is down with rheumatism; and when he and Aunt Sally sat and cried like babies, with fear of going to the poorhouse, I tell you it brought the tears into my eyes."

And so the reports were made, and then they planned how they could best use their ten dollars. It seemed like a drop in the bucket, when set against all the want and suffering they had found; but it would do something.

On that Saturday evening the Widow Bashlot bent over the bed of the sick child, with weeping and wails of anguish. The howling blast piped without and the frost nipped within. She suffered because she had forced herself to beg. For herself she had rather die than become a pauper, but for her child—O, God, have mercy!

A wailing cry like this had burst from her lips, when the tramp at her door attracted her attention, and presently a gentle rap followed. She answered the summons, and found four young men upon her stoop.

She knew them well, for they had been schoolmates with her son who had gone to sea and never returned. And they came into the house; they piled up the fuel on the hearth until the bright flame leaped and roared, and the sick child reached out its wasted arms to embrace the genial warmth. They brought forth bread and tea and sugar and butter and cheese.

"All right," said Sam Pepper, who regarded these as his special charges, in answer to the woman's ejaculations of astonishment. "We are John Digby's Reform Club, and we are going into the missionary work; and such folks as you are we want to convert—want to convert from suffering to comfort, if we can. So keep up a good heart, and let us do for you what your own Willie would have done if he had lived. It'll be a comfort to us. We'll call often. You shan't want if we can help it."

The widow's sobbing, bursting return of blessings cannot be reproduced by tongue or pen. When the young men reached the highway, Sam Pepper burst forth:

"Boys, as true as heaven, I would not exchange the blessing of that poor widow's heart for all the joy that ever came in the old way at the tavern. There's something more than fun in this."

And his companions agreed with him.

In another part of the town, on the outskirts of the village, in a poor, thatched hut lived Ben Driscoll and his wife Sally.

In other years they had been well and happy; and, though never forehanded, yet they had not known want till old age and sickness had deprived them of their ability to work. And on this cold winter's night Uncle Ben and Aunt Sally sat and shivered over the heat of such stuff as they had been able to gather from the snow-covered hedges, and the old man sighed as he thought of the alms-house.

"If we could only get through the winter. But who can help us?"

And old Uncle Ben and his wife were aroused from their stupor of chill and hunger by the tramp of feet and hum of voices; and shortly the door opened and John Digby and his companions entered.

A fire was speedily burning on the hearth, and a good store of provisions was opened out on the table.

The old man wondered, and Tom Lowden made answer:

"It's all right, Uncle Ben. This is Jack Digby's Reform Club. We've stopped our rations of spirits and tobacco, and are going to invest the result in a missionary enterprise. We want to convert you and Aunt Sally, if we can."

"Convert us, Tom?"

"Aye—convert you to comfort and peace; and perhaps, also, convert you to the belief that there's a grain of good left in humanity still. We mean to take you in hand the coming winter, and you shan't suffer if we can help it."

The boys did not leave the cot until they had helped the aged couple to a hearty meal, and had piled up fuel enough to last until they came again; and when they finally withdrew, the song of their blessing was sounding in their ears.

And so the reformers went on until their night's work was done; and when they came to separate they declared that they had found such enjoyment as they had never known before.

During the succeeding week, three new members were added to the club—men who were willing to cut off expenses for rum and tobacco, and devote the proceeds to the relief of the poor and distressed of the town.

And ere long Digby's Reform Club became a noted institution in that place. The projectors could hardly credit the evidence of their own senses in contemplating the results of their three months' labor. Two and twenty members had joined, and the fund of relief amounted to nearly forty dollars a week, and each man was pledged to pay in weekly the exact sum his spirits and tobacco cost him. If he continued to use tobacco, he took a lower place in the company, and the use of spirits as a beverage was sufficient cause for expulsion. When people saw the good that was being done, they were anxious to give their aid, and be connected with the merry crew; but the laws of the club were fixed; no money could come to its fund except such as had been saved by the donor from some evil habit, or of cutting off some useless luxury.

It was a bright Sabbath in spring-time, and it had been given out that Parson Meekly was going to preach a sermon upon Digby's Reform Club, and the old meeting house was filled to overflowing. The clergyman read his text from St. John's Gospel—"Can there be any good come out of Nazareth? Come and see." And when he had told the story of Digby's Reform Club, and pictured the good results of its labors, he proclaimed to all, "Go ye, and do likewise."

Once John Digby and his companions had fancied it would be a proud moment when they had brought the old parson to recognize the worth of their labors; but the blessings of those upon whom their bounties had fallen had made such sweet music in their ears, and the satisfaction of duties truly done had dropped so soothingly upon their souls, they found no room for that baser pride which they had before that time anticipated.—Exchange.

CHICAGO RENTS.

A clothing firm, occupying a prominent corner in Chicago, concluded some weeks ago that on the first of May it would extend its first floor room by leasing the quarters then occupied by a German saloon-keeper. The clothing people already occupied the floors above the saloon on lease, and, by a sort of agreement with the owner of the block, had a call on the ground floor whenever they were ready to pay the rental demanded. This time having arrived, the manager of the clothing store, in order to avoid misunderstanding with the German, and possibly to prevent ruinous competition in bids for the lease, called on the saloon-keeper and in a friendly way remarked that he guessed his firm would take the store-room after the first of May, and that the dispenser of beer and pretzels had better be looking for new quarters.

"But I don't vant to move," protested the German.

"Well, but you'll have to. You're a poor man, and we are rich and we can pay three times as much for this room as you can. If you go out quietly, and make no trouble about it, we'll help you find a new place. If you stay here at all you'll pay a rent that'll make you sick—mind that.

"Vell, you come in two weeks and I dell you vot I do."

Two weeks later, or shortly before the first of May, the manager called again. The German was all smiles.

"Dot's all right, mine vriend. You may schtay upstairs, and I'll schtay here. I don't pay no rent at all, but you pay seex hundred tollars a year more as you paid lasht. I haf bought the block!"—Chicago Hat Review.

Time wears out the fictions of opinion, and doth by degrees discover and unmask that fallacy of ungrounded persuasions, but confirms the dictates and sentiments of nature.—Bishop Wilkins.

Thou Knowest Best, O Lord.

"It seems such a woful waste
Of precious talent and time,
To be lying here day after day
Just in my life's best prime—
With such a weight on my breast,
And such a mist on my brain,
That I little or nothing know
Save that living is only pain—
When I might be doing some work
Or saying some helpful word
To hasten Thy kingdom on—
But Thou knowest best, O Lord.

"Thy purposes will not fail
Because of my idleness—
The stars in their courses fight
For the cause that Thou dost bless—
The angels move at Thy word
Swifter than light of sun—
And the patient soul works best
When it prays 'Thy will be done!'
It may be that never again
I shall march with the plough or the sword,
It may be—no matter—Amen,
For Thou knowest best, O Lord."

RAVING CRAZY.

As a Budget reporter was interviewing a prominent Elm-street gentlemen's furnishing goods dealer in regard to the spring styles in hats yesterday, he overheard the following confab between two lately married men:—

"Neat-looking silk hats, those, eh, Smith?"

"Yes, and that reminds me, I've got to get me another."

"What! another one. Why, it was only three weeks ago that you bought one. What has become of that?"

"Gone, Jones, gone. Heard anything about those crazy parties the women are going crazy over?" Haven't, eh?"

"No, but what's that got to do with hats?"

"Well, I'il tell you. When I bought the last one, I carried it home and hung it on the rack. I intended to go to Boston the next day and wear that hat, but when I went to get it it wasn't there. I asked Mrs. Smith where it was, and she said:—

"'Oh, John, was that your best hat? Such a lovely crazy patchwork basket! Just come in and see it,' and she took me by the arm and piloted me through the crazy portiere into her sewing room, and I hope to be sunk if she didn't have that brand new silky turned bottom up, mounted on three legs, with pom-poms dangling on the rim, ribbons glued and landscapes painted all over it. Well, sir, I was mad."

"Well, that was a queer predicament for a $10 hat to get into. Ruined it, didn't it?"

"Ruined it. Well, I should smile. The mass of ruins was perfect, but I forgave her, and things run along smooth until Wednesday at supper time. I was in a great hurry to get back to the office, and I was mighty hungry, too. When I got home my wife was out and so was the fire, and no supper ready. While I stood ruminating on the prospects of obtaining a little nourishment in the way of grub, the door opened and in came my wife with a dozen bundles in her arms, and this is the explanation she gave:—

"'Oh, laws, there, I'm just tired to death. But such a nice time. Just been down to Mrs. Sniggles' crazy quilting party, and on my way back just dropped into the crazy tea at the Franklin-street Church. Such a jolly time; and I've finished those crazy suspenders for you, dear, and I've got just time to get ready to attend the meeting of the ladies' crazy circle and the benevolent society for embroidering crazy pantaloons and knick-knacks for those poor little Hottentot children, way off somewhere; and that makes me think, John, where is that old broken shovel that used to hang in the coal bin? I wish you'd find it. I'll fix it up real nice, and we'll hang it over the mantel. It will make a handsome crazy ornament and—'"

"But I couldn't stand it any more, and let myself out of the front door. I'll tell you what, Jones, if this crazy business goes on much further, I'm going to study up a patent crazy-jacket. Really, I think the old woman is going off her balance."

And Smith paid for his hat and went out.—Manchester Budget.

COLD WATER BEFORE BREAKFAST.—A goblet of water, taken before breakfast, does several things. 1. It passes through the stomach into the small intestines in a continuous and uninterrupted flow. 2. It partly distends the stomach, stretching, and to some extent, obliterating the rugæ. 3. It thins and washes out into the gut most of the tenacious mucous. 4. It increases the fullness of the capillaries of the stomach, directly if the water is warm, and indirectly in a reactionary way if it is cold. 5. It causes peristalsis of the whole alimentary tract, wakes it up, so to speak, and gives it a morning exercise and washing.

The beneficial effects of a drink of water before breakfast may account for the desire for water at this time of the day, particularly on rising. How often we find that when we are hungry (when our stomachs are tubular and filled with mucous) we want a drink before beginning to eat.—New York Herald.

The Journal.
FRIDAY EVENING, SEPTEMBER 21, 1888.

GEN. BANKS gets the expected nomination for Congress in the 5th district, receiving 42 votes on the first ballot to 28 for ex-Mayor Fox of Cambridge and 12 scattering. He will be elected without difficulty.

CONGRESSMAN ROCKWELL was renominated with neatness and dispatch at Chester Wednesday, and D. B. Wesson of Springfield was named for presidential elector. Councilor Gunn was also renominated at Springfield yesterday.

THE Democrats propose making a lively campaign of it in this state, and will put in as much work as if there was a chance of electing their candidates. Mr. Russell, their nominee for governor, is to canvass the state thoroughly, speaking nearly every night between now and election. We admire his pluck, but fear he will be poorly repaid for his expenditure of time and strength.

Two young women had a prize fight of seven rounds last Sunday on Navy Island, Niagara river, Ont., dressed in tights and surrounded by fifty male sports. It was eminently fitting that such a wretched spectacle should be given on the Sabbath, desecrating the laws of both God and man, and putting performers and spectators outside the pale of civilization and decency. It is a pity that such persons live, and still more that newspapers will publish the details of their degrading doings.

MAINE voters defeated a proposed constitutional amendment restoring annual sessions of the Legislature, last week. They evidently know a good thing when they have it, and are not afarid to give those who wish it a chance to vote on the question. Here in Massachusetts our law makers have so far succeeded in preventing the people from recording their views on the question of annual elections or sessions, but the time will come before a great while when the people will see to it that the servants they send to Boston shall show greater respect for their wishes in the matter.

A NEW sort of contract, not contemplated by our immigant laws, was brought to light at Castle Garden last Sunday, when about 25 young Swedish women arrived on the steamer Hekla, all under contract to marry men in this country, who had furnished money for their passage, the business having been conducted by a matrimonial agency. The puzzled authorities were inclined to detain them, but concluded they had no authority to do so, and the trusting damsels went on their ways to various parts of the country to wed the men they had never seen, but whose characters had been vouched for by their pastors.

THE congressional problem in the 11th district grows in interest as the time of the convention draws near, but the outcome is as yet quite uncertain, with the chances in favor of Rodney Wallace of Fitchburg. His friends claim 60 delegates already, from Worcester county and Holyoke, while District Attorney Bond of Northampton is credited with 29, Judge Conant of Greenfield 24, and Col. Walker of Belchertown with 15. These all come from Hampshire and Franklin counties, which together will have 94 delegates out of a total of 153 in the convention. They have it in their power therefore to name the candidate if they can only agree to "pool their issues." Under the circumstances this would seem a wise thing for them to do, unless they want to see Mr. Wallace rake in the prize.

A "big thing" in the steamboat line was to have been started on the Hudson this week, the steamer City of Albany carrying passengers between New York and Albany for ten cents each, while for $1 additional they might help themselves to food whenever inclined, the table being set on the upper deck all the time. The scheme is calculated to prove exceedingly popular, but the owners of the boat refused to start until they were paid, and the money was not at hand. The projectors of the scheme say they will buy a boat, however, and start it next Monday.

It was enough to disgust every honest lover of the sport to see the way the ball game was conducted last Saturday. It was supposed to be a friendly game between clubs composed of Palmer and Thorndike players, or players who had been with the respective teams steadily through the season, but each manager presented five outside players in his team, each man getting the best he could for his money, and the game as played did not in any way represent the ball-playing ability of the two villages. Nearly all the runs were made on errors, the Palmers finally winning by a score of 7 to 6.

A Slight Burglary.

The Weeks House was entered Tuesday night by some unknown person, and the till broken into and its contents, amounting to about $7, stolen. The show-case was somewhat disturbed, yet none of its contents were found to be missing, excepting some small change in a cup. The sleeping apartment up-stairs occupied by George Brown was also visited, and the noise of the midnight intruder awoke Mr. Brown, who ran outside his room and shut the burglar in, but the latter went through a window to the ground while the former was calling for help, and escaped.

Flynn-Thompson.

The wedding of Dr. J. J. Flynn and Miss Marcella A. Thompson occurred at St. Thomas's Catholic church Tuesday morning, the ceremony being performed with a high nuptial mass by Rev. T. J. Sullivan, in the presence of a large number. The interior of the church was tastefully decorated for the occasion, and presented a pleasing spectacle. The ushers were Dr. J. F. O'Neil of Springfield, M. D. Sullivan of Palmer, William L. Mooney of Boston and M. Halloran of Stafford Springs, Ct. Miss Katie L. Mooney of Boston was the maid of honor, and wore a cream surah silk, while the best man was Dr. F. J. Bassett of Worcester. The bride was attired in a rich white ottoman silk, brocaded with silver, with court train, and a large white veil of tulle that almost enveloped her figure. A reception followed at 11 a. m. at the North Main street residence of the bride, where the wedding breakfast was served by Caterer Joseph Legein of Springfield. In the center of the table was a pyramid constructed of fruit and flowers, while festoons of smilax encircled it. The presents were quite numerous, and in some instances costly, notable among them being the silver water service from the bride's mother; silver tea service from William Mooney and family of Boston; silver fruit basket from Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Heavens of Boston; steel engraving from Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Hall of Springfield; side-board from Miss Julia Thompson. ### An Emphatic Protest.

Editor Journal:—The time is come when some one ought to speak a few plain words concerning the manner in which base-ball playing here in Palmer is managed. There are many people among us who love this game because of the pleasure, good-will and physical development which it may and should include, but they do not relish the idea of being made the dupes of irresponsible tricksters who can see no higher result in anything than its ability to net them a dollar. Last spring when the Palmer boys desired to organize a base ball club, the citizens of the village were asked to contribute to their support. The answer was a generous one, but the men who supported this movement did so because of interest in our young men, and not from any desire to furnish means whereby gamblers could be afforded a "sure thing" for dollars. Those who have persisted, even when surprised and disgusted, in giving their support to the game, know that at least three different times during the past summer our park has been the scene of a disgraceful controversary, the result being that many real lovers of base-ball have become so ashamed of these rows as to refuse to have any more to do with listening to this war of "kickers." The solution of this difficulty is easy. Let the management of the Palmer club refuse to allow any man or set of men to "work" the nine for the manipulator's pocket; insist that those who play act like gentlemen, and so conduct themselves as to avoid becoming obnoxious to ladies; depend upon the honest rivalry between the different villages to bring the people to the games; when there is to be a lively game play the Palmer boys in their usual positions, as far as possible, and refuse to expend the income of the club in importing outside players in whom the Palmer people have no earthly interest; refuse also to compete with those nines which are unwilling to play local talent. Do these things, and base-ball in Palmer will cease to be a breeder of controversy and a disgust to those who love sport more than trickery, and prefer good nature to curse and jibe. Let me not be misunderstood. I have no ill-will for those who manage the Palmer team. On the contrary it is because I wish them well in their venture and desire to see the boys who compose the nine enjoy themselves; it is because I am positive that the present situation foretells disaster; it is because of these, and only these facts, that I write. I love the game, and am unwilling, without an emphatic protest, to see it given over to those influences which are born of cupidity, and will result in destruction.

A LOVER OF THE GAME.

A Successful Democratic Rally and Street Parade.

The Democrats of Eastern Hampden assembled here Wednesday evening and successfully ratified the nomination of Cleveland and Thurman. The threatening weather of the day, with occasional drops of rain, caused the interested ones to wear a disheartened look, but fortunately the sun was seen through the clouds shortly before the arrival of the speakers from Boston, at 5.32. They were met at the station by the reception committee and escorted to the Nassowanno House, where they were assigned pleasant quarters and agreeably entertained, while later a reception was given them at the South Main street residence of John Feeney. All the railroads centering here ran special trains, crowds came from all points of the compass, and long before it was time to begin the evening's programme the streets were full of people. The special trains were delayed in arriving, but the procession was formed rapidly and moved at 8.25 over the following route: Down Main street to Fox avenue, countermarching to Thorndike, through Thorndike to Pleasant, through Pleasant to Pearl, through Pearl to Park, through Park to Maple, thence to Central, from Central to Park, through Park to Pine, through Pine to Squier, down Squier to Main, up Main to the Point of Rocks, countermarching to Democratic headquarters, where a campaign banner bearing the portraits of Cleveland and Thurman was thrown to the breeze with a display of colored lights. The procession was organized at the union station as follows:

Chief marshal, S. L. Ferry, and assistants.
Drum major, R. A. Cox.
Chicopee Drum Corps, 20 men.
Springfield Battalions, consolidated, 300 men.
Indian Orchard Drum Corps, 14 men.
Indian Orchard Democratic Club, 40 men.
Ware Cadet Band, 20 men.
Ware Democratic Club, 100 men.
Palmer Democratic Clubs, consolidated, 300 men.
Bondsville Brass Band, 20 men.
Bondsville Battalion, 75 men.
Ludlow and Brimfield, 100 men.

Many private residences and business places along the line of march were illuminated with Japanese lanterns, candles, etc., the best display being made by George W. Lyman. At the Democratic headquarters colored lights were burned and rockets sent up while the procession was passing. Cheer after cheer went up as the procession passed along, and it was a great night for the Democracy of Eastern Hampden county.

About 9 o'clock a solid mass of humanity surrounded the speakers' stand, which was erected for the occasion at the corner of Main and Thorndike streets, to hear the remainder of the evening's programme. The stand was finely decorated with the national colors, Japanese lanterns and bunting, and upon the platform were seated the following gentlemen: Hon. William E. Russell, Cambridge; Hon. John J. Donovan, Lowell; William N. Osgood, Boston; Senator Spellman, Lawyer James B. Carroll, Lawson Sibley, Simon Pierce, C. F. Sheehan and James O'Keefe of Springfield; H. C. Strong, M. J. Dillon, A. J. Northrop, John Feeney, C. L. Alexander, H. E. Huntley, Palmer; Phillip Keefe and Dr. Ryan of Ware. At 9 o'clock President Huntley of the Cleveland and Thurman Club called the meeting to order, and introduced Lawyer James B. Carroll of Springfield as the presiding officer of the evening. Mr. Carroll introduced Hon. W. E. Russell as the first speaker of the evening, who was greeted with cheers as he stepped to the front. After thanking them for their most hearty welcome, the speaker alluded to this town as the center of a flourishing agricultural district, and as one of those typical communities that had made New England a power in the nation, a place of all others to appeal to the honesty and intelligence of the people on the great issues of the day. He defined the tariff, saying its purpose had always been to raise revenue, but now for the first time a great party, the Republican, had declared that its object and sole mission was to raise prices. He showed the effect of the tariff in raising prices, taxing heavily the necessaries of life and raw materials. After showing plainly the advantage that a reduction on certain articles of foreign manufacture would be to the workingmen of the country, he said; "Mr. Harrison himself now confesses that the Mills bill 'is only a step toward free trade.' But if it is a step, then the position of the Republican party in the past was a stride, and to-day it is a straddle." He believed it would benefit the whole people and build up and develop the industries of the country to reduce unnecessary and burdensome taxation.

Mayor John J. Donovan of Lowell was then presented. The speaker said briefly that "the principles that underline our great political contest are such as to render them of vital interest from one end of the country to the other. I feel with sorrow," he continued, "that the Republican leaders and organs have presented this issue of the tariff wrongly by cries of free trade. To-day they lay capital against labor or reverse it, as they think for the best interest of themselves. They are falling in the mire when they misrepresent us, for honesty is the best policy."

William N. Osgood, candidate for secretary of state, followed, denouncing a too high protective tariff and eulogizing the cause of President Cleveland.

Suicide of a Business Man.

The people of the village were startled by the news Monday morning that Arba Squier, a long-time resident of the town, had committed suicide at his home on Green street, and investigation proved that he had cut his throat from ear to ear. The deed was done at the barn about 7 o'clock, with a razor, both jugular veins being severed, and death resulted almost instantly. Mr. Squier was a son of Arba Squier of Monson and a nephew of Mrs. Eliphalet Trask of Springfield. He was one of a family of five sons, of whom Horace, Solomon and Leroy are still living, Wesley having died in his youth while studying for the ministry. His wife was a native of Salem. He has been in business in Monson for many years as a contractor and lumber dealer, and has built many of the dwelling houses and business blocks in Monson and vicinity. Last winter he made a journey to Los Angeles, Cal., for his health, but returned depressed in spirits and not improved in his physical condition. Since then his family have been very solicitous concerning him, though it was thought by no one that he contemplated self-destruction. One of his sons, Wesley, is librarian in the public library, and the other, Albert L., has not yet engaged in any business. The funeral was largely attended by friends and relatives Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, Rev. Mr. Emerson officiating. The interment was at Moulton Hill cemetery.

Liquor Sellers Must Go.

The law and order loving people of Monson have decided that the best interests of the town do not demand the keeping and selling of liquor, and a bill of complaint in equity, signed by A. A. Gage, C. L. Peck and John Leahy, selectmen of the town, and the following citizens: E. P. Newton, H. E. Bugbee, J. H. Thompson, Charles Hathaway, Horace Squier, Alonson N. Chaffee, William H. Horton, G. H. Foskit, H. G. Rogers, S. F. Cushman, R. M. Reynolds, D. W. Ellis, A. D. Ellis, William J. Rickets, L. S. Munn and William H. Underwood, has been filed in the office of the clerk of courts, for the superior court, against John Curley of this place. It represents that "John Curley of Monson is the owner of a parcel of land with the buildings thereon, which is described that there is standing upon said land a three-story frame building owned by said John Curley and occupied in part for dwellings. That a certain tenement therein, to wit: a portion of the basement, has been and now is, with the knowledge and consent of the said John Curley, used for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors." The petitioners pray that an injunction may be issued by the court, restraining and enjoining the said Curley, his servants and agents and all other parties interested therein from using, maintaining and keeping said tenement for the illegal keeping and sale of intoxicating liquors, and that it may be decreed that said tenement shall be abated as a common nuisance. As this is the first case of the kind attempted in this section, the result is watched with considerable interest. The bill is brought under a law passed in 1887 as follows:

> The supreme judicial court and superior court shall have jurisdiction in equity upon information filed by the district attorney of the district, or upon the petition of not less than ten legal voters of any town or city, setting forth the fact that any building, place or tenement therein is resorted to for prostitution, lewdness or illegal gaming, or is used for the illegal keeping or sale of intoxicating liquors, to restrain, enjoin or abate the same as a common nuisance, and an injunction for such purpose may be issued by any justice of either of said courts.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, Sept. 19, 1888.

A round of the political headquarters today reveals the fact that the day of election is drawing near and the political managers realize that time is short in which they can do their work. The attendance at these resorts has been steadily increasing ever since the campaign opened. Candidates are there from different doubtful districts to lay before the committee the critical or the hopeful nature of the situation in that particular bailiwick, and to induce the potent arm of the central authority, or better yet, the more potent purse, to exert itself in his behalf and save the district to the cause of good government and reform. Queer, isn't it, how much reformation we have in this country? Ever since I can remember, the one crying issue in every campaign has been reform, and we do not seem to be any nearer the goal than we were years ago. There is an advantage about reform as a watchword, for, as Birdofredum Sawin says, "There's nuthin' in it the other side can any ways get hold on." The Republicans want to get into office in order to reform the Democratic administration out, and the Democrats want to keep in in order to reform the tariff. Each party wants to reform something, and the voters have to decide which makes out the best case.

But there can be no fair complaint that the voters are not instructed this year, and somebody must be spending money for campaign printing. Tons of literature bearing on the tariff have been sent out by the several organizations. The Home Market Club is doing practically all of this document work for the Republican state committe, and the Young Men's Democratic Club is doing likewise for the Democratic organization. The latter have sent out but little directly, but indirectly they have disposed of about 200,000 documents. But that is small compared with the amount sent out by the Home Market Club. The Massachusetts Tariff Reform League also sends out much matter, and has an organization which is daily improving. To-day it has on hand one of the most effective documents of the year. It was prepared by a manufacturer in western Massachusetts who is connected with protectionist partners, but who differs from them. The Prohibitionists are also sending out pretty strong reading and expect, so they say since their state convention, to gain over their vote of last year. If any voter wishes for documents of any of these organizations, he can get them by addressing them simply to Boston. This is distinctly a reading campaign, and it won't hurt the voters to read what is said on both sides. They can "read, mark and inwardly digest," and the state will be all the better for an intelligent vote. Each headquarters has many documents and there is a large assortment bearing on different classes,—farmers, mechanics and so on.

From this time on, campaign speaking promises to be lively. The greatest demonstration which has been proposed thus far has been proposed by the Republicans. Their plan is to have a big torch-light procession of all the Republican clubs of the state in Boston, Oct. 17. They expect to have speaking that night in Music Hall, in Faneuil Hall and in Tremont Temple. The speakers have not been engaged yet, but it is expected to have a high grade of ability. Generally, neither party expects to have help from speakers from outside the state. Home talent will be relied upon, and in that respect the Democrats will be as practical patronizers of home talent as will the Republicans. Of course the real reason is that all the best speakers of each party are wanted in doubtful states, and neither party thinks that there is need of spending much time or money on Massachusetts. The Democrats will keep William E. Russell on the stump nearly every night from now till election. He has a programme laid out which will allow him to return to Boston every day, except during the week when he is making the tour of western Massachusetts. That week will be the middle week in October. The arrangement for it will probably be this: Monday, Holyoke; Tuesday, Westfield; Wednesday, Northampton; Thursday, Pittsfield; Friday, North Adams, Saturday, Greenfield. He will be accompanied by Messrs. Corcoran and Osgood, who are candidates with him on the Democratic ticket, and will have in reserve for use if need be, such men as Josiah Quincy. It will be noticed that old Democratic war horses are in the rear this year, and that it is the young men who are coming to the front.

On the Republican side, the programme does not seem to be laid out as much in detail. Much will be made of Mr. H. J. Pettifer, whom the Home Market Club has brought over from England to tell the workingmen the advantage of protection. He opens his course with a meeting to-night in Tremont Temple, which has been well advertised on the streets today. Edward Fitzwilliam is another of the prominent speakers on the Republican side who will pay particular attention to the workingmen. He will be remembered as the author of the poetic little welcome to Blaine which was read to him on the steamer before he landed.

By the carrying of the New Bedford caucuses last night, Mr. Randall is sure of the Republican nomination in the first congressional district, but there are mutterings of a bolt. The second district is still in doubt between Morse and Burden. Tomorrow night it will be seen whether Treasurer Beard will succeed in getting the nomination in the third district. The other Republican candidates seem to be practically decided upon. In the fourth district they will not put up any one, in all probability. In the fifth Banks got it by the close majority of one. In the sixth there will be no opposition to Lodge, and in the seventh Coggswell seems to be equally sure. In the eighth, Mr. Greenhalge of Lowell is conceded the nomination. In the ninth, John W. Chandler of Brookline has it already. In the tenth, Joseph H. Walker has defeated the Bates party. In the eleventh, the nomination is yet to be made. In the twelfth, Congressman Rockwell is all right for a third term.

As to the Democrats, they will hold congressional conventions September 26 at Newburyport for the seventh district, at Lowell for the eighth, in New Bedford for the first, in Worcester for the tenth, and in South Framingham for the ninth. For the fifth they will meet in Cambridge the 25th. It remains to be seen what nominations they make, but they do not seem to have expectations of increasing the number of congressmen, and will be pleased if they hold their own.

The dome of the state house has been gilded, after being covered with stagings nearly all summer, and the unsightly structure will now be removed to give way to the brilliancy of fresh gold. The fence of the state house grounds still remains the red which vexed so many good souls, but it will be covered with the appropriate black as soon as the red has killed the rust on the iron.

Legislative nominations continue to be the solicitude of local politicians and of temperance and liquor people, but they do not attract much outside attention.

How the Girls Kiss.

The New York girl bows her stately head,
And she fixes her stylish lips
In a firm, hard way, and lets them go
In spasmodic little snips.

The Boston girl removeth her specs,
And freezeth her face with a smile;
Then she sticks out her lips, like an open book,
And cheweth a bean meanwhile.

The St. Louis girl says never a word,
And you'd think she was rather tame,
With her practical views of the matter in hand,
But she gets there all the same.

The Baltimore girl, the pride of the south,
In her clinging and soulful way,
Absorbs it all with a yearnful yearn
As big as a bale of hay.

The Chicago girl gets a grip on herself,
As she carefully takes off her hat;
Then she grabs up the prize in a frenzied way,
Like a terrier shaking a rat.

The Washington girl, so gentle and sweet,
Lets her lips meet the coming kiss
With rapturous warmth, and the youthful souls
Float away on a sea of bliss.

AMONG THE PARAGRAPHERS.

I needed change and rest,
So I sought a swell resort;
Though its service was the best,
Yet the prices made me snort.

But it was not so strange
That I came off second best;
For the waiters got the change
And the landlord got the rest.

Brown (taking Robinson home)—"What d'ye s'pose your (hic) wife'll say t'morrow morning, Robinson?" Robinson—"She'll (hic) shay new hat an' silk dresh, Browny, old boy, an' b'gosh she won't shay 'em (hic) more'n once, either."—Texas Siftings.

Customer (to fruit seller)—"How much for the plums, aunty?" Aunty—"Penny apiece, sah." Customer—"That's very high for plums, aunty; can't you let me have four for five cents?" Aunty—"No, sah; dem plums cost mo'n dat."—The Epoch.

Kirby—"Lend me a fiver, will you, old boy? I'm clean broke." Moxey—"That's a pretty good ring you wear. Why don't you hock it?" Kirby—"Couldn't, you know. It's a souvenir of a deceased brother." Moxey—"Well, my money is a souvenir of a deceased father. Day-day, old fel." (And he walks off.)—Time.

Mrs. Guzzler (who holds the purse strings)—"Do you mean to tell me that you were not drunk last night, Guzzler?" Maj. Guzzler—"Well, perhaps I was loaded, my dear." Mrs. Guzzler—"I should say so. Now remember, Guzzler, the next time you come home loaded you are going to be fired."—Town Topics.

A German countryman was up before a magistrate for some offense. Said the dispenser of law, "Are you married?" "Yes." "Who to?" Prisoner—"To a woman." Magistrate—"Of course you are married to a woman." "Well," said the prisoner, "I do not see why you say 'of course'; there's my sister, she is married to a man."—Stray.

Mind that? I want noise; and, look here, pick me out a nice rusty one. My neighbor's children hoot and yell till 10 o'clock every night, so—(viciously)—I mean to cut my grass from 4 to 6 every morning."—Punch.

TRUE ECONOMY. — It is true economy to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla, for 100 Doses for One Dollar," is original with and true only of this popular medicine. If you wish to prove this, buy a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla and measure its contents. You will find it to hold 100 teaspoonfuls. Now read the directions, and you will find that the average dose for persons of different ages is less than one teaspoonful. This is certainly conclusive and unanswerable evidence of the peculiar strength and economy of Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"I took Hood's Sarsaparilla for loss of appetite, dyspepsia, and general languor. It did me a vast amount of good, and I have no hesitancy in recommending it."—J. W. Willeford, Quincy, Ill.

"I have been troubled by scrofulous affection all my life. It is one of the marked recollections of my boyhood days, and for several years has rendered me unable to labor much. I think Hood's Sarsaparilla, which I have been using at intervals for ten years, is the best thing I have ever taken. I am now 60, and my general health seems better than ever.—H. D. Abbott, Warren, N. H.

Bringing Home the Cows.

Trudging along with naked feet,
 Whistling a merry tune,
O'er rustling ferns, through tasseled pines,
 With the balmy air of June
Lifting the curls from the heated brow,
 As the night-bird trills her lay,
And the moon comes up with smiling face
 To take leave of the dying day.

Behind the mountains the sun has sunk
 In a mass of golden glory;
And the whippoorwill to his gentle mate
 Is telling the old, old story.
Cheerily on his way he keeps,
 Where the cow-bell's tingle leads him
To a quiet spot in the thicket shade,
 Where his pets have come to meet him.

With a muttered low, old Spot steps forth,
 She knows her little master,
And is patiently waiting, chewing her cud,
 Her call from the fragrant pasture.
All into line they fall at once,
 Rose, and Bess and Brindle,
White-face bringing up the rear
 With short, quick steps and nimble.

Katydids are calling now
 From out their leafy cover,
Fireflies their lamps have brought
 To light the way, and Rover,
Dancing gayly on before,
 Has gone to tell their coming,
While mother's sitting at the door,
 A home-tune softly humming.

The "bars" are reached, and now old Spot
 Breaks into a canter,
Brindle, Rose and steady Bess,
 Mercy! how they scamper
Into the yard, up to the door,
 Where mother wants to meet them;
With shining pails and little stool,
 All ready now to milk them.

'Tis a quiet scene, a homely one,
 But touching, simple, tender,
Here in the evening's deepening shades,
 And one he will remember.
In after years he will look back
 Upon this happy time,
And think no hour in life so sweet
 As when he brought home the kine.

TRAGEDY OF THE VASE.

George S. Goodwin stood with his back to the fireplace and one hand in his pocket, thinking. When his two hands were strong he usually had them both in his pockets, but on this evening one hung in a sling, broken. Half an hour before his wife had departed for church with Mr. and Mrs. Whittier, their next door neighbors, and shortly afterward the servants had gone, presumably to church, too. So for once the master of the house was in complete possession. And every few moments he reached over with his left hand and gently stroked the one in the sling and muttered: "It's jolly painful, I know," and then fell to thinking again.

Although late in the afternoon, no fire burned in the grate. But Goodwin felt just a little lonesome and second nature drew him to the fireplace for comfort. When a man is lonesome, a fire, if it does not actually cheer him, at least is very companionable, and when there is no fire a person must just put up with the place where a fire should be. So Goodwin backed up to the empty grate, looked at the ceiling, gazed slowly round the room for something to interest him, then down at his toes and leaned back against the mantelpiece. Then there was a crash. Behind him stood a handsome Dresden vase, reflected in a mirror, and as Godwin leaned back the weakly-supported mantel-shelf partly gave way under his weight, and the vase—an heirloom—and to him priceless—toppled over, fell against the shoulder of his broken arm, slid an inch or so and stuck in a wrinkle of the coat he was wearing, and there it stuck while numerous small ornaments clattered and smashed on the fender below. Goodwin stood perfectly still and gazed for a moment ruefully at the smashed articles on the floor, then slowly turned his head and looked at the vase. There it stuck, a delicate pink flower caught insecurely on a wrinkle of the coat—a hold that any move, however slight, might unloose and then for a smash on the mantelpiece and fender. He looked for a moment without breathing, then said: "Well, I say," and looked again. Cautiously raising his left hand across his breast until the finger tips were up to his shoulder, but there stopped, for without moving his injured arm he could get no farther, and to move the limb simply meant destruction to the vase. He thought of all the schemes that would come into his mind, whether by a quick turn he could catch the vase before it hit the mantel-piece—or could catch it by putting his hand behind his back and letting it fall into the hand. But all the schemes he felt certain would end in the breaking of the one ornament in the house that he could not afford to spare.

"No," he muttered to himself. "There's nothing to do but stand right here like a statue until Gracie comes home. That's all about it."

The clock behind him struck 7. The house was now quite dark and a fog hung low over the grounds outside.

As George Goodwin stood, as still as a man without a cigar can be expected to stand, he thought he heard a grating sound in the kitchen. There was a rasp and the back door seemed to be opened quickly and shut softly. As he strained his hearing he caught the sound of muffled footsteps. Instantly the thought of burglars flashed through his mind. Church burglars without a doubt. He had read repeatedly of men who watch for those houses left unattended by occupants and servants, all going out of a Sunday evening. What if the fact that no light burned and everything was so quiet in the house, had caused some of those ruffians to believe the house untenanted. It was more than likely. What to do he did not know. To move was out of the question. Yes, even though they stole the house from over him he would not break that vase. If he shouted he was afraid the motion necessary would unlodge it from its frail hold. Anyhow, his nearest neighbor he knew had gone to church. The only thing to be done was to keep as still as he could, and, if possible, get a glimpse of the burglars so that he might make it interesting for them afterward. If they caught sight of him doubtless they would decamp a good deal quicker than they came. If they didn't he might get evidence sufficient to capture and convict them. The noise in the back kitchen increased. There was now no doubt of the character of the visit.

Into the hall they came, two men with a dark lantern throwing a small circle of light before them. The door of the sitting-room where Goodwin was stood partly open. He dimly saw them peer into the dining-room, then one of them coming toward the sitting-room door said in a loud whisper:

"Bill, let's start 'ere."

"No," said the other, "there ain't ever nothing in a sittin'-room. That's the sittin'-room. Let's find their bed-room. That's where they keep their jewels and money—if they've got any."

"Well, then, upstairs we goes," and up they went quietly.

Goodwin knew they would be rewarded. His wife's jewelry was sure to be exposed. Some of it was valuable and some not. It was all too good to be lost, anyhow.

"One thing is certain," thought Goodwin, "I can tell the height of those men, and one of them is called Bill. Both are illiterate, and one has a peculiar, rasping voice, easy of identification. A good detective will soon hunt them out. Probably that light will fall on one of their faces before they go."

After a short time the stairs again creaked, and the circle of light again shot past the door, and the lantern swung in the hands of Bill.

"This here is a pretty slick haul," said he of the raspy voice, "I say them's real, don't you?"

"Course them's real all right, they're big glitters too. Shall we look for any silver, or have we got all we want?"

"Well, I'm for some of their silver if we can find it."

"If you ask me," said Bill, "I'm for off with this as we've got. It's all we can handle. I say we go."

"All right. We've got plenty of time and we'll divide here. Then you'll go your way and I'll go mine. We can't both be nabbed."

"What? Divide 'ere? It's dangerous. This ain't no place to divide. I've got 'em all safe in my pockets and we'll divvy when we gets home. Let's go."

"No, you don't," said the raspy voice, "I'm for a divvy right here and I'm goin' to have it. Then we can get our own way. Sit down here. Give me the light. That's it—now bundle the things out on the floor. There you are."

The two men sat down near the open door with the light between them and Bill slowly began to disgorge. There were the wife's diamond rings, two of them; Goodwin's watch, which he had laid aside when his arm was broken; a fine gold necklace and locket, a diamond for the hair, four gold bracelets, jeweled; a number of smaller articles, and then there was a stop. As the light shown on Bill's fingers Goodwin noticed his index finger on the right hand was gone. But both had worn a mask.

"Where's them gold studs and that there gold brooch I saw you take?" said Bill as he put his hand in an inside pocket and took them out.

"Where's the brooch?"

"There wasn't no brooch as I got."

"Yes, there was. It's the best thing of the swag. Out with it."

"I say I haven't got no brooch."

"Yer tryin' to sneak it. You can't fool me. Out with it, or I'll make ye."

"I haven't got—stand off, Tom. Don't lay hands on me."

"Out with it."

Both men were now on their feet.

"Stand off, Tom. I warn ye. I hain't got—"

"Give it up," said Tom, in a low, savage voice, as he sprang at the throat of his companion.

There was a sharp, quiet struggle, a few gasps of exertion, a gleam in the air. The sitting-room door flew open. A man staggered backward into the room with his hands to his breast.

"I warned—"

"You've done for me, Bill," gasped the man, as he sank on his knees.

"I warned you," half-shouted Bill, with terror in his voice as he stared at his companion.

The stricken man shuddered and gasped, stood up, staggered and fell backwards with a heavy crash on the floor. His arms spread out, his head rolled to one side and he lay dead. The lantern, now on its side, streamed on the uncovered face of the murderer, and stamped the likeness on Goodwin's mind. The murderer clutched the door and stood for a moment glaring in terror at the dead man. Goodwin stood transfixed with the awful scene.

"My God!" muttered the man. "I've killed Tom." Then looked at the knife he held in his hand. Holding it at arm's length from him he threw it at the prostrate form. Felt in his coat, tore from the lining the fatal brooch and cast it from him. With one last look he stole out of the room and was gone.

Then the strength faded from George Goodwin. His knees gave way, his senses reeled, his head sunk on his breast, and as he fell to the floor the heavy vase topped over, smashed on Goodwin's head and lay in pieces in the dark room beside the senseless spectator and the murdered man.

Months after the time George Goodwin recovered from the terrible fever that followed the night when the servants found him lying on the floor. He lay delirious from the injuries to his head caused by the vase he had tried so hard to protect. Every person supposed that in a desperate struggle he had killed the burglar, and when the spring time came and he got strong in health and the wound had almost healed his wife and friends realized that he was hopelessly insane. He rapidly gained in strength, but his face bore a troubled look, and for hours he sat brooding—always refusing to enter the sitting-room, and insisting that all the mantelpieces be taken down and that his wife put on no jewelry. Not until May was he able to take short walks.

One bright morning Mrs. Goodwin put on him a heavy coat and sent him for his usual walk in charge of a servant. The path lay over one of the many heaths that surrounded the great city of London and past a row of houses in course of erection. As the invalid and his attendant approached one of the houses a hod carrier came down the ladder and commenced filing his hod with bricks. When the invalid was almost opposite him the man looked up and shouted to a fellow laborer on the half-built wall. This companion looked over the side, and the bright sunlight, reflected from a piece of tin roofing, fell strongly on his face. Goodwin stopped short. Then with a bound he reached the ladder, and before the servant could stop him almost flew up. In an instant he had the man by the throat.

"You murdered the man, Tom," he shouted.

"Stand off; you lie; back!" shouted the man, recoiling aghast.

Then springing forward and putting forth all his strength he hurled the weak man to the ground below.

For a moment the double murderer stood still. Then buttoning his coat over his breast and stepping forward he said:

"Men, I killed Tom Britton."

MUSIC AS SHE IS EXECUTED.

Attending service not long ago, in an elegant church edifice where they worship God with taste in a highly æsthetic manner, the choir began that scriptural poem that compares Solomon with the lilies of the field, somewhat to the former's disadvantage. Although never possessing a great admiration for Solomon, nor considering him a suitable person to hold up as a shining example before the Young Men's Christian Association, still a pang of pity for him was felt when the choir, after expressing unbounded admiration for the lilies of the field, which it is doubtful if they ever observed very closely, began to tell the congregation through the mouth of the soprano that "Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed." Straightway the soprano was reinforced by the bass, who declared that Solomon was decidedly and emphatically not arrayed—was not arrayed. Then the alto ventured it as her opinion that Solomon was not arrayed, when the tenor, without a moment's hesitation, sang as if it had been officially announced that "he was not arrayed." Then when the feelings of the congregation had been wrought up sufficiently, and our sympathies aroused for poor Solomon, whose numerous wives allowed him to go about in such a fashion even in that climate, the choir altogether in a most cool and composed manner informed us that the idea they intended to convey was, that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed "like one of these." These what? So long a time had elapsed since they sang of the lilies that the thread was entirely lost, and by "these," one naturally concluded the choir was designated. Arrayed like one of these? We should think not, indeed! Solomon in a Prince Albert or cutaway coat? Solomon with an eye glass and moustache, his hair cut pompadour? No, most decidedly. Solomon in all the zenith of his glory was not arrayed like one of these.

Despite the experience of the morning the hope still remained that in the evening a sacred song might be sung that would not excite our risibilities or leave the impression that we had been listening to a case of blackmail. But again off started the nimble soprano with the very laudable though startling announcement—"I will wash." Straightway the alto, not to be outdone, declared she should wash. And the tenor finding it to be the thing warbled forth he would wash. Then the deep-chested basso, as though calling up all his fortitude for the plunge, bellowed forth the stern resolve that he also would wash. Next a short interlude on the organ strongly suggestive of the escaping of steam or splash of the waves, after which the choir individually and collectively asserted the firm, unshaken resolve that they would wash. At last they solved the problem by stating that they proposed to "wash their hands in innocency, so will the altar of the Lord be compassed."—Good Housekeeping.

TEMPTED BY DEGREES.

John Newton says Satan seldom comes to Christians with great temptations, or with a great temptation, or with a temptation to commit a great sin.

You bring a green log and a candle together, and they are very safe neighbors; but bring a few shavings and set them alight, and then bring a few small sticks and let them take fire, and you will soon get rid of your log. And so it is with little sins. You will be startled with the idea of committing a great sin, and so the devil brings you a little temptation, and leaves you to indulge yourself. "There is no harm in this," "no great peril in that;" and so by these little chips we are at first easily lighted up, and at last the great log is burned. "Watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation."—Exchange.

NOT FOR INTRUSIVE EYES.—"As you can only be a sister to me," he said, in broken tones, "will you let me kiss you good night?" She shyly said she would. Then he folded her in his strong arms, and gently placing her head against his manly breast, he kissed her passionately. "Mr. Sampson," she said, softly, "this is all so new to me, so—so different from what I thought it would be, that if you will give me a little time to—to think it over, I—I may—" But let us withdraw from the sacred scene.—New York Sun.

Harvest Home.

Across the sunlit fields the reapers come,
 Bearing the garnered sheaves in gladsome train
And in a long procession, one by one
 Singing a melody, some sweet refrain;
And far beyond, the distant meadows' green
 Stretches in beauty o'er the summer main;
From sky to sky a vast expanse is seen
 Of wondrous fields on fields of golden grain.

  Ho, lads! for the harvest-time,
   When the reapers sing
   And the echoes ring
  In the tone of a merry chime.

The ebbing clouds of night have shadowed far
 The leafy wood and purple mountain's height,
Till silently above, each glorious star
 Waxes and wanes within the sombre night;
And when the harvest-moon, like some romance,
 Breaks thro' the darkness and the gloom of night,
Upon the green the joyful reapers dance.

  Ho, lads! for the harvest-time,
   When the reapers sing
   And the echoes ring
  In the tones of a merry chime.

COAL MINERS' WAGES.

The Pennsylvania miner has no cottage or garden, unless he lives a long distance from his work. His home is usually in a cheaply built wooden house, one of a long row just alike, with outside unpainted and inside unfinished,—no cellar, no dooryard, no shade trees about them. Most of these houses have but two rooms, one up stairs and one down, the lower serving for kitchen and sitting-room and, sometimes, when the family is large, for bed-room as well. He lives in a company house on company land and pays rent for the same at varying rates, from $4 to $9 per month. His rent is always taken from his wages before he is paid. He must also, as a rule, pay for the coal he burns in his house, in some localities as high as $2.75 per ton. He works in darkness. In the summer he goes into the mine just as the sun is rising and comes out just as it is setting. In winter he rarely sees daylight at all. It is often so wet in the gallery that his clothes are soaked from morning till night. Sometimes the vein is only three or four feet thick, and he must work in a sitting or reclining position. He is exposed to constant danger from falling rock, fire damp, explosions, or of being buried alive. His work is hard, it is dangerous, it requires skill and ought to be well paid. In fact, however, it is very poorly paid. The average of miners' wages is not greater than those of the ordinary day laborer in Massachusetts. Miners who work on contract, that is, who are paid by the ton of coal mined, in the anthracite mines, earned, in 1884, on an average, $8.84 per week; those who worked by the day, $7 per week; in the bituminous mines, $7.10 per week. Out of these scanty earnings he must buy his own tools and pay for keeping them in repair, and must also buy the oil and the wicks for his lamps and the powder or other explosives he uses.—George A. Denison, in Work and Wages.

NANTUCKET'S JAILER.

Apropos of Nantucket one hears some rather odd sayings and of some quaint happenings there.

"You see, we are somewhat out of the way," said one of the islanders; "so tramps seldom trouble us, and it is only when our summer visitors come that we think of locking our doors at night."

Last fall a man was tried for petty larceny, and sentenced by the judge to three months in jail. A few days after the trial, the judge, accompanied by the sheriff, was on his way to the Boston boat when they passed a man sawing wood.

The sawyer stopped his work, touched his hat and said, "Good morning, Judge."

The judge looked at him a moment, passed on a short distance, then turned to glance backward with the question, "Why, Sheriff, isn't that the man I sentenced to three months in jail?"

"Yes," replied the sheriff, hesitatingly—"yes, that's the man; but you—you see, Judge,—we haven't anyone in jail now, and we thought it a useless expense to hire somebody to keep the jail for three months just for this one man; so I gave him the jail key and told him if he'd sleep there nights it would be all right."—Harper's Magazine for September.

THEY NEVER STRIKE.

There is a class of people in this country, says the Chicago News, who get up at 5 o'clock in the morning and who never get back to bed until 10 or 11 o'clock at night; who work without ceasing the whole of that time and receive no other emolument than food and the plainest clothing. They understand something of every branch of economy and labor, from finance to cooking; though harassed by a hundred responsibilities, though driven and worried, though reproached and looked down upon, they never revolt and they cannot organize for their own protection. Not even sickness releases them from their posts. No sacrifice is deemed too great for them to make, and no incompetency in any branch of their work is excused. No essays, or books, or poems are written in tribute to their steadfastness. They die in the harness and are supplanted as quickly as may be. These are the housekeeping wives of the aborigin.

Dr. Mohn, of Christiana, communicates to his Norwegian conferrees a new method of treatment for whooping cough, for which he claims remarkable results, the disease being cured in a single night. His plan consists simply in the thorough disinfection, by means of burning sulphur, of the rooms, clothing, etc., used by the affected children. The children are taken out of the room, the bedding, furniture and playthings are exposed, and two ounces of sulphur are burned for every 100 cubic feet of space in the room. After the room had thus been exposed to the sulphurous acid fumes the affected children are allowed to return and occupy it. As a result of this treatment, it is claimed that attacks of coughs are immediately alleviated and often entirely disappear.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, SEPTEMBER 28, 1888.

The Democrats have nominated Col. T. W. Higginson to run against Gen. Banks for Congress in the 5th district.

The Prohibitory party in this state is reported to be sadly in need of funds with which to push their campaign. They'd better fall in with the Harrison and Morton procession this year.

Boston women, Protestant and Catholic alike, are registering in unprecedented numbers this fall, so they may vote for school committee, as a result of the agitation of the public school question in that city.

Congressman Russell refused he renomination which was given him by acclamation by the Democratic convention at Worcester, Wednesday, and Irving B. Sayles of Millbury was then nominated in his place.

Every presidential postoffice in the country, with the exception of New York, has been turned over to a Democratic postmaster under President Cleveland, the reformer who proposed to make permanency in office the sure reward for faithfulness in the discharge of its duties. We fear the "allurements of power" have been too much for the president's good intentions.

Treasurer Beard has secured the coveted nomination for Congress, though it looked at one time as though he would miss it. The convention took 20 fruitless ballots last week Thursday, and then adjourned to Tuesday, when the vote stood just the same, showing 26 for A. W. Beard, 22 for H. J. Boardman and 15 for E. L. Pierce. After another ballot Mr. Pierce withdrew his name, and Mr. Beard was nominated on the next ballot.

There is a remarkable lack of love for their leader among the Democrats. They would kick him overboard in a moment if they could feel any hope of success with any other man, but they know that it is Cleveland or nobody, so they endure him and try to be enthusiastic for him, but it is uphill work. The President lacks the elements of personal popularity, and in this respect the difference between him and Thurman is very noticeable.

Yellow Fever continues its deadly work at Jacksonville, with from 100 to 150 new cases a day, though the death rate is not high, rarely reaching ten, and it is hoped that the worst of the plague is over. The whole number of cases to date is 2368; deaths, 237. There is much distress among the poor. Scattering cases in various parts of the South have caused a good deal of alarm, but it is now too late in the season for the disease to obtain a very serious foothold.

We are to have another member of the cabinet, apparently, the Senate having passed the House bill which makes the commissioner of agriculture the "secretary of agriculture," though not agreeing to the section transferring the weather bureau from the war department to the new one. There does not appear to be much more necessity for a secretary of agriculture than for a secretary of manufactures, or of patents, or of railroads, but it will gratify the farmers, and probably do no particular harm.

Democratic papers are publishing what purports to be a complete copy of the Mills tariff bill, but they very generally omit two sections, one of which, section 29, provides for remitting fines imposed upon illicit distillers, followed by provisions making their arrest much more difficult, while the commissioner of internal revenue may remit fines and penalties imposed by the courts. Section 40 repeals all laws imposing special taxes upon retail dealers in liquor and manufacturers of stills—in other words gives $25 a year to every retail liquor dealer in the country. This harmonizes finely with the Democratic howls about the Republican "free whisky" platform.

The tariff bill prepared by the Republican sub-committee was laid before the finance committee of the Senate Tuesday, but was not made formally public. It is understood that it proposes to make a reduction of about $70,000,000 in the revenue, divided about like this: Tobacco, $30,000,000; sugar $25,000,000; alcohol used in the arts, $10,000,000; free list, $5,000,000. In the Mills bill the corresponding reductions are: Tobacco, $17,381,000; sugar, $10,937,000; free list, $19,773,000. The internal revenue tax on tobacco, cigars and cigarettes is removed, alcohol used in the arts and material used in manufacturing twine and bagging are made free, and wool, lumber and salt are left as they are. The duties are as far as possible made specific instead of ad valorem.

The irritation in the tenth district over the nomination of J. H. Walker for Congress culminated last Saturday in a gathering of disaffected Republicans at Worcester, and the nomination of T. C. Bates as "the straight Republican candidate." Mr. Bates, however, is wiser than his followers, and declines to imperil Republican success by accepting the nomination. He reviews the history of politics in the district in a caustic manner, but says he does not propose to be driven out of the party by the Worcester city ring; and concludes:—

> It is time to stop the political strife in this congressional district. There is too much at stake in this campaign throughout the United States, and especially throughout Massachusetts, for you, gentlemen, or those you represent, to pursue any course that will render any aid or comfort to the Democratic or free trade party; it is of the utmost importance that nothing should be done in this district to hazard the election of a staunch protectionist, and one who will in every instance carefully guard the great industrial and manufacturing interests of this commonwealth, and every true and loyal Republican in Massachusetts is now called upon to bury all personal feeling, that the best good of the Republican party may thereby be promoted.

The show window of E. Goodes's shoe store was smashed last Friday night and a pair of shoes stolen. The attempt made to close the stores two evenings a week during the fall and winter has proved fruitless, simply because one merchant dislikes to fall into line and close his doors with the rest. Quite a number from this village attended the second annual social gathering given by D. Winslow Fosket to his friends and acquaintances at Fosket's Mills last Friday evening. The audience room of the Baptist church was reoccupied last Sunday for the first time since alterations were begun last June. The damage inflicted by the lightning-stroke in July has been repaired, the frescoing newly touched up, and the choir moved to the rear of the pulpit, giving to the audience room a much more pleasant appearance, and bringing it into conformity with the prevalent style of arrangement in church edifices. The improvements down stairs are also quite noticeable, the enlarged parlor and kitchen adding greatly to the convenience of the people. The work has been prosecuted under the direction of the pastor, Rev. A. W. Weeks, and the church may well be congratulated on having an "under-shepard" who has displayed such tireless and unselfish devotion and so much ability both in the temporal and in the spiritual affairs of the church.

The town is soon to lose a well-known and esteemed citizen, in the person of J. N. Mr. Lacey entered upon his duties as engineer at the state primary school in 1858, the institution at that time being under the superintendency of Dr. Brooks, and during his engagement in that capacity he has proven a faithful and capable man, and has witnessed some marked changes in the institution. He has never been an aspirant for office, but has been honored by the fire district with the chairmanship of its prudential committee, which office he also holds in the Second Congregational church, while for the past twelve years he has been a director of the Palmer National Bank and a man whose opinion was always sought. Mr. Lacey expects to enter upon his new duties the first of the coming month, and will move his family to Danvers in a short time. His successor at the institution has not yet been appointed.

Academy News.

The scholars are looking forward to the written examinations with great interest.

A singing school has been started at the academy under the direction of Spencer Law.

The members of the chemistry class enjoy their work greatly, and wish they had more time for recitation. The experiments are made easy by an abundance of apparatus, and more is expected every day.

The Crescents of Palmer were easily defeated by the second nine of the academy at North Monson last Saturday, the score standing 33 to 7. The batting and fielding of Flynt and the base-running of Chapin were features.

The question under discussion in the Linophilian society Friday night was: "Resolved, that the Prohibition party was justified in separating from the Republican party." The Republicans as usual, carried the day.

The Academy base ball nine will go to Wilbraham to-morrow morning for a game with the second nine of Wesleyan academy. In the afternoon the Y. T. A. L. of Ware appear on Flynt's Park for a game with the academy nine, which will doubtless prove an interesting contest.

The 46th Regiment Reunion.

The sixteenth reunion of the Forty-sixth regiment was held here Tuesday afternoon. The visitors arrived on a special train from Palmer at 12.15 o'clock, and a detachment of the local Grand Army post met them at the depot, and, preceded by the Monson Silver Drum corps, marched to the residence of William Smith, an old comrade of the regiment, who has been confined to his house by a stroke of paralysis for a number of years. After paying him their respects they resumed their march and halted at Central Hall, where the address of welcome was given by A. A. Gage of the local post. Maj. Spooner of Springfield responded in a pleasant manner. Col. W. G. Bartholomew of the Twenty-seventh regiment was called upon for a short address, after which the business meeting was held and these officers were elected: President, W. S. Shurtleff; vice presidents, Col. L. B. Walkley, Maj. S. B. Spooner, Sergt. Waterman, Lieut. Gideon Wells, W. S. Loomis, Captains Campbell, Justin, Corwall, Lincoln, Cook, Avery and Sergt. Heath; secretary, A. S. Bryant; treasurer, George W. Turner.

The regiment then adjourned to Memorial Hall, where about 150 of the members and invited guests and the local post to the number of 72, were served to a fine dinner by the ladies of the town. Maj. Spooner presided at the after-dinner speaking, and called upon Rev. F. S. Hatch, Dr. Fuller, Rev. J. H. Emerson of Monson, Col. Bartholomew of Tampa, Fla., Capt. Lincoln of Brimfield, Lieut. Loomis of Holyoke, and others.

Many of the residences and business blocks along the line of march were handsomely decorated with flags and bunting. Especially noticeable was W. N. Flynt's residence, and Mr. Flynt was given three hearty cheers by the veterans.

The Grand Army post deserves great credit for the manner in which it entertained the visitors, as nothing was left undone for their comfort and enjoyment. Especial thanks are also due to the ladies who furnished the splendid repast.

WARE AND VICINITY.

The Ware National Bank has declared a dividend of three per cent, payable October 1st.

October 13 is set as the day when the annual inspection of the fire department is to take place.

Our townsman, Edward N. Anderson, has returned from a three-months' trip to Europe, and is in excellent health.

At a meeting of the registrars of voters last evening, there were 28 new names added to the list and 32 erased. There are 844 names on the corrected list.

A delegation of French Protestants from Spencer, with their pastor, Rev. Mr. Bondreau, visited Ware last Sunday, Mr. Bondreau preaching in the morning.

John Thayer's market in Music hall block was entered Friday of last week while the employes were gone to dinner, and about $8 was taken from the money drawer.

An assistant teacher has been appointed to assist the principal, Miss Emma V. Hall, at the grammar school on South street. The school is in a very prosperous condition.

Rev A. T. Perry is to preach at the Memorial church in Springfield next Sunday, Rev. Arthur F. Gillett, professor in the theological seminary, supplying the pulpit here.

The marriage of Elbridge Harwood and Miss Nellie Bond took place at the home of the brides' mother on Church street Thursday afternoon, Rev. A. T. Perry performing the ceremony.

Daniel S. Collins, aged 75 years, 10 months, died suddenly last Sunday. He was eccentric in his habits, but a man of rare judgment. He has been justice of the peace and trial justice, a good neighbor, and a Republican in politics.

Rev. E. S. Huntress, of the First Congregational church at Ware Center, will long be remembered with pleasure by the school children. On Monday afternoon he came to the villiage and distributed a barrel of nice eating apples to the scholars of the grammar school building.

Only two more nights of the Cadet Band fair at the town hall, with a grand dance this evening with music by Amelot's orchestra of Spencer. A week of hard work for the band, and they deserve a good patronage, as they have been free with their open-air concerts the past season.

The Republican voters of Ware formed a Republican Club at the Town Hall last Friday evening with about 350 members. Hon. Charles A. Stevens was elected president; F. G. Fisher, secretary; William H. Cutler, treasurer. A subscription paper has been circulated, and the club will soon raise a new flag.

Bracket, and delegations from neighboring posts will be present. A cordial invitation is extended to our citizens, and an enjoyable occasion is assured.

Next week Friday evening the Ware Center Grange is to hold an open meeting, on which occasion the subject to be discussed is: "Does the farmer's success depend as much on his wife as upon himself?" affirmative, P. J. Nelligan, F. W. Harwood, Mrs. A. S. Jaquith; negative, J. H. Fletcher, N. J. Trench, Mrs. M. Pierce. This is an open meeting, and all are invited.

The corner stone of Trinity Episcopal church will be laid next Wednesday afternoon, the exercises to commence at 3 o'clock. It is expected that Rev. P. V. Finch of Greenfield will lay the stone, and the address made by Rev. John C. Brooks of Springfield. Choice selections of singing have been prepared for the occasion. A large number of clergy of the state have been invited, and quite a number are expected to be present.

Mr. and Mrs. F. D. Winslow were given a surprise party Monday evening, it being their twenty-fifth marriage anniversary. There were nearly one hundred present, who brought with them an elegant easy chair and a large engraving in a massive gilt frame, as tokens of the respect the whole community have for the worthy couple. Rev. E. S. Huntress made the presentation with a few well-timed remarks. A bountiful collation was served, and a merry time enjoyed by all.

The Republican caucus Wednesday evening was one of the largest ever held in town, more than usual interest being felt, as two Ware men were in the field for senator—Charles E. Stevens and Henry C. Davis. F. D. Gilmore, C. C. Hitchcock and H. P. Cummings were elected delegates in favor of Mr. Stevens by 114 votes to 67 for delegates in favor of Mr. Davis. The delegates elected to the congressional convention in favor of M. P. Walker were: F. N. Hosmer, D. W. Ainsworth and H. P. Cummings. Delegates to the county convention were: Calvin Hitchcock, Henry O. Caryl, C. E. Stevens.

The hearing before the selectmen in the case of F. F. Gilmore of the Mansion House, for selling liquor to Thomas McGrath while he was intoxicated, was continued Tuesday evening, S. S. Taft of Palmer appearing for Mr. Gilmore, H. C. Davis for the selectmen, and E. H. Baker for the family of Mr. McGrath, who made the complaint. The hearing was adjourned until to-morrow evening, when it is expected that the selectmen will make known their decision. Those who are at all conversant with the facts of this case will be much surprised if the license is not revoked.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

Boston, Sept. 26, 1888.

It looks lively in several of the congressional districts, and it will be a close rub,—judging from the present situation—for the winning party, whoever it may be. It is too early yet to see what will be the outcome of the contests in the first and second districts. Strong Republicans in the first say that the nomination of ex-Senator Randall will not be followed by a bolt of any consequence, and others say that they will not vote for Randall under any circumstances, and that he will never represent the first district in congress. But the district has naturally a large Republican majority and the Democrats really have little hope of carrying it, though their probable nominee, George Delano of Rochester, is a strong man, they say, as any in the district. Mayor Cummings of Fall River wants the place badly, but he is apparently doomed to disappointment. In the second district, one of the best posted politicians, speaking with me the other day in regard to the prospects of Burden and Morse, said that Morse's best hold is in the fact that he is identified with the prohibitory, or temperance reform element of the Republican party, while Burden, though not opposing that element, is yet not identified with it as Morse is. Then there is another queer thing about Morse. Said my informant, "It is expected that he will slop over once in a while and make himself ridiculous. The people have become used to it and it does not hurt him a bit. If any other man had written that letter that he wanted to hold on to both the councillorship and the congressional position at the same time, it would have killed him politically, but it won't hurt Morse any, for the people expect to see such things in him. On the whole they believe in him." The convention does not occur till Oct. 9, and it will be in Taunton, which will be rather of an advantage to Burden, if the influence of locality goes for anything.

Last night, at the adjourned convention in the third district, Treasurer Beard carried off the congressional nomination through the withdrawal of the delegates who favored Edward L. Pierce for first choice. It was a close fight, but there is no doubt that the party has got the best. Beard will make an excellent congressman if elected. It is not likely that Leopold Morse will run against him, for he has had his fill of public life and wishes to return to his business. John F. Andrew is pretty certain to be the nominee, and he has the authority of Morse for the opinion that the district is Democratic on a full vote. Beard, on the other hand, insists that it is Republican, and he has no doubt that he will be elected. There is a decided mugwump element in the district, and many tariff reformers who have been in the habit of voting the Republican ticket in years past. In the fifth district, though Congressman Hayden carried it two years ago by 3358 plurality, the nomination of Col. Higginson against Banks has put a new face upon matters, and the Democrats to-day say that they have a good chance to win. They rely much upon the Republican dissatisfaction with Banks on account of his age, and expect some help from the negro vote in Ward nine of Boston, where Higginson will get some support from the fact that he commanded the first regiment of colored troops in the war. Harvard college influence will also be in favor of Higginson, and the independant vote in Cambridge has always been large in recent years. In the eighth district the nomination of Greenhalge of Lowell to-day seems to insure the election to the Republicans, for he is an unusually able man. He was a member of the House of Representatives here in 1885 and made an excellent record for a new member. He is a forcible public speaker, with a head for hard sense and solid facts. Samuel Roads, Jr., the Democratic nominee in the seventh district, is popular and has served five years continuously in the Legislature, three in the House and two in the Senate. He will get the full party strength, but his own friends have little hope of electing him. Developments in the ninth show that the fight will be close. The Republicans are confident of electing Candler, and the Democrats have he same feeling about Congressman Burnett. Two years ago Burnett's majority was only 211, and the Republicans have no doubt that their reserve vote will outnumber that, a claim which will be contested. As to the tenth district, those who come down here from Worcester have different stories to tell. The Walker men believe that he will be elected, while the anti-Walker Republicans and the Democrats think that he will surely be defeated. Take it altogether, there has been no year of recent times when the congressional result was so uncertain and the excitement was so great.

In national matters it is still confused. The changes reported here occur both ways, and there is no difference from what I wrote last week—that one can get any news he wants according to his party preferences. Farmers are especially interested in the tariff, and I have seen letters to-day from different parts of the state which shows that the popular desire to learn much about the tariff is as strong as ever, while the patience of the public in listening to tariff speeches is said to be something marvelous. But it is a good thing that it is so, for it is much pleasanter to have a campaign of brains than it is to have one of mud. Republicans will be pleased to learn that the Home Market Club has stopped the circulation of the card with the "English Ticket" printed at the head until it can verify the disputed quotations from the English newspapers. Tons of reading matter are being sent out from each headquarters, and each week only emphasizes this feature of this reading campaign.

Last night occurred the final step in the Swinton History controversy, as far as the school committee is concerned. The report was presented upon the petition of the Evangelical Alliance that the history be restored to its place in the list of text books used in the Boston schools. By a vote of fourteen to two, the full committee accepted the report of the sub-committee refusing to reconsider their action. Their position is that the charges against Swinton's book are well taken, that it does not teach what is correct in regard to Catholic indulgences, and that it should not be restored to the schools. Meantime the agitation increases, and the women of both Protestant and Catholic sects are pressing into the assessors' office to be registered so that they may vote on the election of school committee at the city election next December. The distinction of sects is drawn more strictly than it ever was before, and it is impossible to tell what will be the outcome, and it may be found that the supposed success of sliding over the matter was no success at all. At the same time, it must make the judicious grieve to hear Prof. Townsend talking at this stage in the matter about unsheathing our swords and defending our liberties. We had all better keep cool. It will be bad enough.

The phonograph is on private exhibition here, and its performances are wonders. It will doubtless be perfected so that it will be even more wonderful and practical than it is now, and that is saying much.

It is said that the largest line of Watches, Jewelry and Silverware in Western Massachusetts is now shown by L. B. Coe, 320 Main street, Springfield, who buying in large quantities can afford to sell at near the manufacturer's price. It will certainly pay you to see him.

One of the great attractions in Springfield during the Bay State Fair October 4th to 11th will be Broadhurst & Bros. Central Shoe Store, 376 Main street. They have a mammoth pile of Women's Central Kid Button Boots, $2.50 a pair. Don't miss getting some of them. They are flexible and good as any $4.00 boot you ever put on your foot.

Millinery Store on first floor, Mrs. L. A. Stratton, having purchased the millinery business and good will of Miss B. C. Stewart, formerly of 372 Main street, Springfield, has removed to 6 Pynchon street, one door from Main street, Haynes' Hotel block. She has elegantly furnished the store, and having returned from New York has stocked it with a full line of staple goods and novelties. Opening days, Wednesday and Thursday, October 3d and 4th. Miss Stewart remains as trimmer.

I have been a great sufferer from catarrh for over ten years; had it very bad, could hardly breathe. Some nights I could not sleep—had to walk the floor. I purchased Ely's Cream Balm and am using it freely, it is working a cure surely. I have advised several friends to use it, and with happy results in every case. It is the one medicine above all others made to cure catarrh, and it is worth its weight in gold. I thank God I have found a remedy I can use with safety and that does all that is claimed for it. It is curing my deafness.—B. W. Sperry, Hartford, Conn.

It Is Foolish

To send for the doctor every time you don't feel just right. My doctor's bill for years was over one hundred dollars a years, which made a pretty big hole in my wages. For the past two years I have only spent ten dollars, with which I bought a dozen bottles of Sulphur Bitters, and health has been in my family since using them.—Robert Johnson, Machinist.

When she was a Miss, she clung to Castoria.

Until you have tried what Ayer's Pills can do for you. It is the Liver that renders your views of life so gloomy. Depend upon it, a box or two of Ayer's purely vegetable, sugar-coated, Cathartic Pills would materially change your feelings, and still make

LIFE WORTH LIVING.

Lucius Alexander, Marblehead, Mass., says: "I was severely afflicted with Dyspepsia and Enlargement of the Liver, most of the time being unable to retrain any solid food on my stomach. Three boxes of Ayer's Pills cured me."

"Ayer's Pills are a sure cure for Liver Complaint. Nothing seemed to help me until I finally began to take Ayer's Pills."—E. S. Fulton, Hanover, N. H.

Her Answer.

The moon was hid behind a cloud;
The night was soft and fair
As Paradise; the scent of flowers
Filled all the summer air.

In simple words he urged his suit,
By love made eloquent,
While on the girl's cheek, as he spoke,
The blushes came and went.

But when, at last, his story told,
He ceased his earnest plea,
She shyly raised her eyes and asked,
"What is your salary?"

THE OLD MAN GREW SUSPICIOUS.

An old fellow who was running a sawmill down in the southern part of Tennessee had considerable trouble in getting a man who understood the business of sawyer. Finally, when the owner of the mill had become wholly discouraged, a respectable fellow came along and asked for a situation. He showed a paper from one of the leading mill men in the country stating that the applicant was one of the best of sawyers. He was engaged, and when he had been at work about three weeks, the proprietor called him one morning and said:

"Mr. Collier, you needn't go to work today."

"Are you going to shut down?"

"Yas, so fur ez you are consarned."

"What, you don't want me any longer?"

"Yas, that's it."

"Why, haven't I been giving satisfaction?"

"O, yas, so fur ez yo' work goes."

"Then what is the matter?"

"Well, I have noticed that you put on too many shirts."

"I don't understand you."

"Wall, you change yo' shirts too often. You have been workin' here now three weeks, an' I notice that you put on a clean shirt about every eight days."

"But, my gracious, is there anything wrong in that?"

"To some folks thar mouten't be, but thar is to me. A fellar came along here once and changed his shirt every twelve days."

"Well," said the sawyer, "what else did he do?"

"Run away and married my daughter, that's what he done. Then thar came along a fellar that changed his shirt 'bout every ten days. He ran away with my wife. Then another feller changed his shirt 'bout every nine days, and he ran away with my pocketbook that contained $15. So I find that the off'ner a man changes his shirt the worse he is, an' afearin' that you mout run away with my mule colts, I reckon you'd better go now, while I've got my eye on you."—Arkansaw Traveler.

FIXING THE WAIST LINE.

The other day I heard a distinguished artist enlarge on the laws of dress, and noted down some of his many suggestions. "In placing the waist line," said this artist, "many women make a most egregious mistake. Being anxious to have a tapering form, they push the waist line lower and lower. If it were not for the bulwark of the hip bones there is no knowing where the enemy's advance would be arrested. Now, unfortunately, many women's legs are too short already, and even when such is not the case the lowering of the waist line destroys all sense of proportion. Nothing gives such an effect of height as length of the lower limbs. From the top of the head to the waist should be one-third of the whole body; if that proportion is exceeded harmony is at once destroyed. This you will find is the measurement of the Venus de Medici. But where the sculptor wishes to convey the impression of greater activity, as in the Diana, the distance from the knee to the waist is lengthened by raising the waist line. Take the two statuettes of the Venus and the Diana of exactly the same height, and the latter will strike you as being much taller. So, ladies, if you wish to appear tall, raise the line of the waist.

"A simple way to convince yourselves of the truth of this law is by cutting out two paper figures of the same height, and then lengthen the waist of one. Place them a little distance apart, and your eye will tell you, in spite of the fact revealed by the tape measure, that the doll with the shorter waist is the taller of the two."—Kansas City Journal.

Irish woman (to Chinaman in street car)—"Shove yersilf ferninst the carnor wid yer blue shir-rt, and give a leddy a chance to set down, bad cess to yez?"

Chinaman—"Wow?"

Irish Woman—"Can't yez talk English, ye yallar haythen?"

Chinaman—"If I couldn't talkee English muchee bettle old Ilish woman, yep, I shootee my glandmothle."—N. Y. Sun.

Jinks—"Johnson wants to borrow $100 from me. Is he good?" Binks—"Yes, with proper securities." Jinks—"What would you suggest?" Binks—"A chain and padlock, a pair of handcuffs, and a dog. That would be enough I think to hold him."—Lowell Citizen.

Inebriated funny man (to policeman)—"see zhat mansh goin' up streetsh." "Yes." "Well, he's (hic) frien' mine, 'n I want to speak to (hic) 'm. Just arresh (hic) his 'tention for me, won't you?"—Washington Hatchet.

A FAIR TRIAL OF HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA for scrofula, salt rheum, or any affection caused by impure blood, is sufficient to convince any one of the superior and peculiar curative powers of this medicine. The following statement is right to the point.

"My daughter Mary was afflicted with scrofulous sore neck from the time she was 22 months old till she became 6 years of age. Lumps formed in her neck, causing great annoyance, and two of them, after growing to the size of a pigeon's egg, broke and discharged. One became a running sore for three years. We thought we would give Hood's Sarsaparilla a thorough trial. We began with it in January, and in a few months, after she had taken five bottles, all supperation had ceased. We then waited three months, when, as a new lump was beginning to form, we again gave her Hood's Sarsaparilla. After she had taken less than two bottles the lump and all indications of scrofula had entirely disappeared, and now she seems to be a healthy child."—J. S. Carlile, Nauright, N. J.

COOL WEATHER

Is here, and with it comes the necessity for warmer wearing apparel. The problem of economy generally occupies the mind of a large majority of humanity. How often we hear the question, "Where shall we find the best for the least money?" Many would reply where the lowest prices are quoted. Cheapening the quality cheapens the price. Don't be too anxious to buy where lowest prices are advertised. We trust to the merits of our Clothing and fair prices for patronage.

AT first we did not intend to quote prices, but thinking possibly some of Palmer's people were thinking of buying a new suit this fall, a brief price list might not be amiss. So we decided to call attention to the manner in which our clothing is made, and the popular prices attached to it in plain figures, so "He who runs, may read." We hardly know where to commence, as our tables are loaded with bargains. But here goes

200 SACK SUITS

From Putnam, Woodvale, Mechanicsville and Broad Brook Woolens. All wool, heavy-weight finished, with extra heavy linings. Chamois watch pockets, patent buttons that never come off. Double seams that never rip, because they are sewed with silk. Every detail of manufacture, simply perfect. Although these suits are worth $16, we shall offer them for $12.00, $12.00,

250 SUITS FROM BEST WOOLENS

Produced in America, finished with the same thoroughness, with a number of extra good qualities added, worth at least $20. Our price a popular one, $16.00. $16.00.

PALMER men are somewhat given to paying exorbitant prices for custom clothing. We wish they would inspect what we offer for extra fine suits, which are lined throughout with heavy satin and made from Hockanum, Eddy, Globe and Empire Worsted. No other productions good enough for these elegant suits. We sometimes show these fine goods to our city tailors, and they are surprised at the thoroughness and beauty of make, and most of all the low price. "How can you sell at such reasonable figures!" is their usual exclamation. We have just closed

1500 PAIRS OF PANTALOONS AT A PRICE

And propose to give our patrons a benefit by selling them at

50c. a pair Less than cost of manufacture. 50c. a pair

$2.50 and $3.00 are the prevailing prices for $4.00 and $5.00 Pantaloons, as long as this extensive purchase shall last.

REMEMBER

We are satisfied with only the best, and are not very far from the depot, on the east side, 325 Main street, corner of Bridge street.

Building and Being.

The king would build, so a legend says,
The finest of all fine palaces.

He sent for St. Thomas, builder rare,
And bade him to rear them a wonder fair.

The king's great treasure was placed at hand,
And with it the sovereign's one command—

"Build well, O builder so good and great!
And add to the glory of my estate.

"Build well, nor spare of my wealth to show
A prouder palace than mortals know."

The king took leave of his kingdom then,
And wandered far from the haunts of men.

St. Thomas the king's great treasure spent
In worthier way than his master meant.

He clad the naked, the hungry fed,
The oil of gladness around him shed.

He blessed them all with the ample store,
As never a king's wealth blessed before.

The king came back from his journey long,
But found no grace in the happy throng

That greeted him now on his slow return,
To teach him the lesson he ought to learn.

The king came back to his well-spent gold;
But no new palace could he behold.

In terrible anger he swore, and said
That the builder's folly should cost his head.

St. Thomas in dungeon dark was cast,
Till the time for his punishment dire were passed.

Then it chanced, or the good God willed it so,
That the king's own brother in death lay low.

When four day's dead, as the legend reads,
He rose to humanity's life and needs.

From sleep of the dust he strangely woke,
And thus to his brother the king he spoke:

"I have been to Paradise, O my king!
And have heard the heavenly angels sing.

"And there I saw, by the gates of gold,
A palace finer than tongue has told;

"Its walls and towers were lifted high
In beautiful grace to the bending sky;

"Its glories, there in that radiant place,
Shone forth like a smile from the dear Lord's face.

"An angel said it was builded there
By the good St. Thomas, with love and care

"For our fellow-men, and that it should be Thy palace of peace through eternity."

The king this vision pondered well,
Till he took St. Thomas from dungeon cell,

And said, "O builder! he most is wise
Who buildeth ever for Paradise."

LOVE IN MASQUERADE.

Bob Russell turned over with a yawn and threw down the paper whose sporting columns he had been studying.

He was on the green cambric-covered lounge in his Aunt Sarah Briscomb's cool dim sitting-room. He found it very comfortable after a morning of rowing and bicycling. Each afternoon of the five days he had sojourned in Westfield had found him there, reading or sleeping.

He had concluded that Westfield was a first-class place for a summer vacation when a fellow was tired out with a long siege of city newpaper work.

Aunt Sarah was in the porch, her placid face just beginning to cool from the heat of dinner-getting, and her spectacled eyes slowly closing.

Bob, looking out at her, was falling into a like drowsiness, when a phaeton pulled up briskly at the gate, and a young person stepped out of it, who, once seen, dispelled the last vestige of Bob's sleepiness.

He sat up promptly, straining his eyes for a better view.

"Well!" Aunt Sarah called out, in gratified tones, pulling herself back from the verge of her nap, and getting ready to receive her caller. "I'm very glad to see you, Miss Stone. I wasn't certain you'd come to-day. I've got my butter all ready, though, and you can have as many eggs as you want."

Miss Stone hitched her horse, and came up the path and took a wide porch-chair.

Bob congratulated himself on its position. It gave him a good view of the young lady's very sweet face.

"It's so warm," she said, fanning herself with a stylish little fan.

Bob observed that her dress and her bonnet were surprisingly pretty for Westfield.

"So 'tis," Aunt Sarah agreed. "I thought likely you'd stay at your uncle's and sit out in the hammock and read, or something. It's just the day for it."

Miss Stone frowned gently.

"I never sit in the hammock," she said with a pretty seriousness; "I have no time for it."

"Well, there!" cried Aunt Sarah, beginning to laugh; "I forgot all about your notions, Miss Stone; or there, I won't call 'em notions, I'll call 'em principles. You're just as tickled over the country as ever?"

"Just," cried Miss Stone, smiling good-temperedly.

"And you get up at four o'clock every morning yet?"

"And sometimes earlier."

"And you keep on helping your Aunt Mirandy with the work? You help get breakfast, and help get dinner, and — "

"And bake—yes, I've learned to make bread," said Miss Stone, triumphantly. "And I milked last night; I milked real straight, too, only a little went out of the pail."

Aunt Sarah was laughing silently.

"And you don't want to get back home—sure you don't?" she queried.

"Oh, no!" Miss Stone's gloved hands clasped themselves impetuously. "I never want to see the city again—never! This is such a lovely life—so perfect!"

"You're just the same, sure enough," Aunt Sarah observed, wiping her dampened glasses. "I reckoned you'd get over it. Well, do you think just as much of Hank Grimes as ever?"

"Oh, our boy?" Miss Stone grimmaced laughingly. "Now you know what I meant. I said that he was honest, and faithful, and industrious; that he had all the qualities of a gentleman, except good-breeding, and that I should prefer an energetic son of toil for a husband," said Miss Stone, getting becomingly pink in her earnestness, "to a frivolous, flippant-minded city man—they're all frivolous and flippant-minded!" Miss Stone tapped the arm of her chair decisively. "And no lack of birth, and station, and wealth should prevent my marrying an honest, worthy young man. I think I might prefer one with some worldly disadvantages; I could lift him up," said Miss Stone seriously.

"Well, yes; you could support the family," Aunt Sarah assented, with a chuckling gaze on her visitor's pretty diamond brooch and earrings.

"Yes, I could lift him," Miss Stone repeated gently. "But Hank Grimes—I don't quite like red hair, and crossed eyes, and freckles, all together; and I believe he is deeply devoted to Mary Ann Simmons, besides."

Miss Stone laughed sweetly and dimplingly, as she rose to follow Aunt Sarah to the dairy.

Bob Russell sat in reflective stillness during the ten minutes which passed before Miss Stone went out at the gate with a basket of eggs and a pail of butter, and drove away.

He rushed to the window to watch her—a slender and charming figure, with a peachy face, against the dark background of the phaeton. He felt a sudden regret, which amounted to poignant anguish, that he was a frivolous, flippant-minded city man.

* * * * * * * * *

Miss Stone was very favorably impressed with Mrs. Briscomb's new hired man. She met him the next time she drove after butter and eggs.

Mrs. Briscomb persuaded her to stay to supper, and the hired man had unexpectedly presented himself at the table.

He was very pleasant-looking—almost handsome, in spite of his rough boots and his ill-fitting clothing—and he was not half as awkward and red-headed as Hank Grimes.

He did not eat with his knife, either; nor scrape his chair on the floor; and the few remarks he made were sensible, and even grammatical.

Miss Stone almost disliked to call him "Eben," but Mrs. Briscomb had introduced him as Eben, and she had no choice.

It seemed quite natural that the hired man should politely and respectfully offer to drive her home. She had walked down, since the day was cool, and it was growing a little dark.

It did not seem at all unconventional, either, that they should take the longest road, in order to see a pretty ravine which Miss Stone had described to the hired man.

But when they had reached the ravine they had quite forgotten it. They were talking interestedly on other topics.

"You are fond of farm-work and the country?" Miss Stone was saying.

"Very," Eben rejoined with much enthusiasm.

"You were brought up on a farm?" she added.

"Well, no; not entirely," the hired man responded.

"But you chose farm-work because you are fond of it," said Miss Stone warmly. "In that respect we are exactly alike; I love it! I suppose," she added gently, "that you were obliged to choose something?"

"I—yes, I—support myself," Eben responded, with his eyes on his companion's fair face.

"It is nothing to regret—indeed it is not!" Miss Stone declared comfortingly. "I admire anybody who is independent and ambitious; they're the only people I do admire."

"Oh, that is very good in you!" the hired man murmured, tucking the robe more closely about her.

"And I suppose you haven't had many advantages?" Miss Stone pursued with sympathetic softness.

"Well, I've had—some schooling," the hired man admitted.

"It isn't so great a loss," said Miss Stone earnestly. "Many of our best and greatest men had very few educational opportunities." It sounded somewhat trite when she had said it; but the hired man was looking at her with warm gratitude. "Nothing is to be regretted but indolence and lack of principle."

"You are very kind," Eben said in softened tones.

The moon was just rising; the daisies in the fields shone white under it, and the scent of the fresh crops filled the air.

Certainly the hired man was not to be blamed for driving past Miss Stone's gate when they had reached it, with a glance at his companion which was the perfection of respectful deference, nor was Miss Stone to be blamed for not noticing the gate.

She wondered, when she had gone to bed that night, whether she should not have noticed it, and whether they should not have got back before half-past nine.

But she went to sleep quite sweetly and peacefully. For—in view of her staunch beliefs she felt a pleasant triumph in the fact—she had found Mrs. Briscomb's hired man remarkably agreeable and—nice. She should tell Mrs. Briscomb about it the very next time she saw her.

She did not see Mrs. Briscomb again however. Eben came over with the butter and eggs. He brought them in small quantities, and came often consequently; and he came when he had no butter or eggs to bring. And Miss Stone, quite necessarily, saw a good deal of him. He came with Mrs. Briscomb's carriage sometimes, and Miss Stone could hardly have avoided driving with him occasionally.

She thought, at the end of four weeks, that she must certainly go to see Mrs. Briscomb and tell her how delightfully her own hired man had proved her theories.

Eben was, to say the least, extremely interesting. He was bright and appreciative; he was pleasantly humorous on occasion; and he was very well informed on a surprising variety of subjects.

Miss Stone pictured a long succession of studious night-vigils. She could hardly wait to tell Mrs. Briscomb.

It needed only a distant locomotive to bring matters to a climax. Eben's horse saw it as he and Miss Stone drove over the track one evening, and reared and plunged.

Miss Stone screamed faintly, and clung to the hired man's arm, and when they were safe on the other side, the hired man's arm was round her.

"Will you let me take care of you always, Miss Stone—Gertrude?" he whispered in stereotyped phrase. "I know you will!"

Miss Stone turned a pretty, yearning, dubious face upon him.

"What will people say?" she murmured.

"I thought you didn't care," said the hired man, in tender reproach, loosening his arm.

"I don't—I don't!" cried Miss Stone, pulling it tightly again. "You are all I want. I don't care for anybody. And we shall live out here on a little farm of our own?" she said presently.

"Well, perhaps—summers," said Eben.

"What shall we do winters?" said Miss Stone, wonderingly.

"Well, I've thought of going into the newspaper business," the hired man rejoined, lightly.

And she laughed in fond enjoyment of the joke.

The remark occurred to her three days later. She went into the city to do a little shopping, and to break the news of her engagement to her guardian.

She told herself vehemently that she did not dread the process in the least; she was certain that it would not make the slightest difference what anybody said.

Still she felt a little odd as she walked up the street from the station. The Egberts drove past in their liveried carriage. The newly-married and excessively stylish Nicolls met her smilingly. Lottie Hall and her rich young fiance bowed to her from a dog-cart. Well, she didn't care what they said; she should marry Eben though the whole world should rise up to oppose it.

It was the Daily Reflector building which put her in mind of Eben's joke about the newspaper business.

The affluent publisher of it stood on the steps, talking to a gentleman. He was an old friend of Miss Stone, and he hurried down to speak to her.

"In for some shopping?" he said. "By the way, we were just speaking of you. Mr. Russell tells me he has met you. Mr. Russell, here's Miss Stone."

Mr. Russell came down the steps, with his hat raised. He was immaculately arrayed in a pale summer suit, knotty, silver-mounted stick, a high hat and polished shoes.

He was in no wise different from the dozens of young men passing at the moment, but Miss Stone stared at him in speechless, motionless bewilderment, and Mr. Russell stared back at her.

It was not till the publisher had bowed himself away that they spoke.

"Eben!" Miss Stone gasped.

"Gertrude!" Mr. Russell rejoined.

He had recovered himself, and was smiling down at her.

"I didn't know you were coming to-day!"

"Who—who are you?" Miss Stone murmured faintly.

"Well, I'm the young person you're going to marry, for one thing!" the young man responded emphatically; and led her into a neighboring restaurant before saying anything more.

"I couldn't help it!" he declared breathlessly over their untouched cream. "I couldn't think of any other way, and I was awfully gone on you from the first minute. It was in the porch that first afternoon. I heard what you said, you know—all about frivolous, flippant-minded city men; and I didn't dare to appear in my proper character—I didn't, truly."

His voice shook with something besides feeling, and he put his handkerchief to his lips.

Miss Stone smiled too, helplessly.

"And you—haven't been doing—farm-work?" she said.

"Good gracious! I don't know a plough from a reaper," Bob responded. "I've been lying about in Aunt Sarah's front yard—when I haven't been with you."

Miss Stone mused, pink and tremulous.

"Where did you get the clothes?" she said.

"Borrowed 'em. I have bought them now, though, I am going to keep them forever!" said her lover fervently. "See here, dear—am I frivolous and flippant-minded? Do you want to bake and milk exclusively? Aren't you rather glad I am not a hired man?"

Miss Stone looked at him with a helpless fondness.

"Well, since it is you!" she confessed sweetly.

ONE WAY TO TELL.—"Ef a gentleman say "Come hyar, you black scamp, en' black mer boots, en' do it quick, too,' I know's dat man's frum drown south, an' he's gwine to gimme sompen, en' mos't likely a quartah."

Thus a darky boy an a Mississippi steamboat was explaining his position as to sectional proclivities. He went on further to say: "Ef anuther gentlemen say to me, 'My dear young cullud frien', will you be so kind ez to black my boots?' dat man's from Greenlan's icy mountains, er sommers in dat direction. "Talking about swindlers," said old Dea. ### MARRIAGE ENGAGEMENTS.

Engagements are entered into at the present time without the consideration becoming to a matter of so great importance. We are often told that "marriages are contracted much later in life than they used to be," —and that this seems the better way—but we doubt its being any wiser course than that of the earlier days, when in country towns especially, the young men, married soon after attaining their majority, choosing their wives from those in their own station in life, which is always the better plan. In this case the young woman knows that it is some work and not all play in the combined home life.

My first advice therefore is, do not allow yourselves to form unsuitable attachments.

Next, no young man has any right to so monopolize a young woman as to deter others from showing her the ordinary courtesies of life. And no young woman has any right to encourage attentions she does not intend to reciprocate. Therefore, do not allow yourselves such exclusive rights in one another as to cause unpleasant criticism to be made by outside parties. Many a life-long distrust of human nature, as many a life long heart-ache also, would be avoided were these conditions of social intercourse observed. If, as the outcome of such obedience a true affection is developed, let an engagement be entered into advisedly, discreetly, and seriously, for its abiding consequences are almost as weighty as the marriage vow itself. Let your engagement be made known as soon as it can consistently, for it is one of the things which it is considered harmless to deny, and much mischief sometimes ensues from such thoughtlessness.

So, in this matter we say, seek not to deny your engagement any more than you would your marriage. In a former paper we have spoken of dress as touching the social evil problem. And so great is the love of display in dress in many instances that young men desirous of "making homes" are deterred therefrom oftentimes on this account. So that another caution is to be specially emphasized, seek not to mislead your lover in this matter. Do not pretend an indifference to dress that you do not feel. Above all things be frank at the outset in this matter of expenditure, and let the item of dress always conform to the acknowledged income. Always having this understood previous to your marriage. It is ten-fold more manly and womanly to treat this subject during your courtship, than to allow it to become a source of annoyance later.—Mrs. Ellen Bliss Hooker, in Good Housekeeping.

WILL NATURAL GAS DESTROY THE WORLD?

Recent events furnish grounds for a new and very plausible theory in regard to the burning of the world, a theory that attributes the conflagration to well-known natural agencies—agencies which at present threaten to get beyond human control, and by which the world, and possibly the universe, may be destroyed, not only in our own time, but in the course of a few years, or even months. It will be remembered that within a short time what is known as "natural gas" has come into very general use in parts of Pennsylvania. This gas is obtained by boring through the surface of the earth into cavities where the gas has been stored by the processes of nature, and whence it escapes into the upper air as soon as an outlet is offered. Gas wells have been discovered in Ohio, New Mexico and California, and will doubtless, like oil wells, be discovered in many localities, perhaps in Europe and Asia as well as in this country. When we have a circle of gas wells extending from Pennsylvania through the Ohio Valley to the Missouri Valley, then to the Pacific, and via Alaska and Behring Straits to Siberia and on through Russia in Europe to Germany and even England, who knows what may happen? Even with the few wells now running, what would occur if the fire by some chance should be conveyed to the great gas wells in the bowels of the earth? Might not the sea be dried up and the mountains hurled from their foundations? Indeed, might not the earth be blown to fragments—converted, so to speak, into decillions of incendiary rockets for extending the conflagration to the rest of the universe! Who knows?—Charleston News and Courier.

The memory of our defeats and sins ought not to fill us with despair, but to furnish us with new incentives for more heroic effort. Nature does not keep her wounds open; as soon as they are made, the healing process begins. There is nothing more unnatural or morbid than dwelling on one's past errors and blunders; it defeats the very ends which nature is trying to secure. The errors of the past ought to be healed—by nobler living, by the consciousness of having overcome them. The only real repentance for a past sin is to be found not in sitting down in sackcloth and ashes, but in girding our loins afresh and pushing on to a height where the temptations of the past have no longer any power over us.—Christian Union.

Once upon a time a Mouse went to a Sage and said:

"Tell me, O, Wise Man, a Remedy for my Trouble. I'm so small that people look upon me with contempt."

"Be content, O, Mouse," was the reply of the Sage, after Reflection. "If your size was increased ten fold men would simply shout 'Rats!' at you."

The Old "Amen Corner."

You ask why I look so sad, a sayin' not a word;
Why, Becky! thoughts of long ago, my memory have stirred;
I'm thinking of the meetin' house, where preached old Father Horner,
But mostly I've been thinkin' 'bout that dear old "amen corner."

Them days long since have fled and gone; dear friends have passed away;
And even that old meetin' house is goin' to decay;
I look around among the folks; if any I may see:
But all are gone, it seems to me, but, Becky, you and me.

I see the dear old corner yet; 'twas close beside the altar;
Them good old souls whose seats were there, had faith that wouldn't falter.
Their hearts were all aglow with love, their shouts would awe the scorner,
Like thunder claps, their loud "amens" would shake the "amen corner."

Indeed, it seemed sometimes we sat by cool Siloam's fountain;
And then again, we seemed to stand on Sinai's awful mountain;
No matter what the text might be, for sinner, saint, or mourner,
There always flamed the Spirit's fire, around the "amen corner."

It was as if the Pentecost, with flaming tongues of fire,
Was still a-bringin' heaven down, and liftin' souls up higher;
And loud as was the earnest voice of dear old Father Horner,
Far louder were the glad amens that shook the "amen corner."

That dear old spot was holy ground, the very gate of heaven;
The glory cloud seemed restin' there, by mercy's shower riven;
The manna and the smitten rock our hungry souls sustainin',
Along the road beset with foes, from Egpyt up to Canaan.

Sometimes, I well remember yet, things seemed a little dreary;
The meetin's 'peared a little slow, the people dull and weary;
Then victory would seem to be with Satan, and the scorner,
Until a hallelujah broke from out the "amen corner."

Then, quick as lightning, things would change, the foe would flee before us,
And shouts of "glory!" "praise the Lord!" would blend in mighty chorus;
I tell you, Becky, 'tis a truth, it cheered the weakest mourner,
Old Satan never could prevail against that "amen corner."

The tears will dim my failin' eyes, my heart gets almost broken,
When now I'm in the meetin' house, with not an "amen," spoken;
Our preacher is a learned man, not much like Father Horner,—
Who preaches, while the people snore in that old "amen corner."

They've got a bran new meetin' house, with cushions for the people,
And windows made of painted glass, and on the top a steeple,
An organ does the praisin' now, they've no bench for the mourner,
They've Brussels carpet on the floor, but where's the "amen corner?"

I tell you, Becky, I believe that's why we keep retreatin';
They say they've found a better way; "religion has no mourner;"
And so they've smashed the mourner's bench, and killed the "amen corner."

But, wife, there's one thing comforts me, the church will be a standin',
When Satan and his scoffin' crew have made a final landin'.
The church is built on solid rock, and proof against the scorner;
We'll find the New Jerusalem much like the "amen corner."

LOVE IN THE MOUNTAINS.

The next day after the affair at Burton's, in Tennessee, I went over to Andrews's Forks, seven or eight miles away, and was made heartily welcome at the largest of the three cabins. Andrews had a daughter about 20 years old, and I soon understood that she was to be married the next day. Indeed, the lucky young man was on the ground and waiting. He was a six-footer, slim as a tooth pick, awkward as a calf and dead in love. The girl was more shy, but not to be bluffed by my presence. When I entered the front door the young man, who answered to the name of Davy, ran out of the back. He felt confused and embarrassed, and taking his seat on a log about 30 feet from the house, he hid his face as much as possible behind a sapling. Andrews called for him, then Mrs. Andrews called out, but he put his finger in his mouth and would not come. Then his Susan went out and said:

"Now, Davy, what's the scrimmage? He'un hasn't come here to hurt we'uns."

"I ain't scart."

"Then come along in. All of us will be ashamed of ye."

"Got a headache," said Davy, as he hung his head back.

"Honest?"

"Yes, orful honest. Feels like it 'ud split."

"Shucks! You's bashful. You's afraid he'd poke fun at we'uns. But he won't, Davy. Pop's dun told him we're to jine, and he says it's right. He'un won't laff, Davy."

"Fur shore?"

"Fur snake shore. Come in, Davy."

She came leading him by the hand, and I did my best to put him at his ease. In this I succeded so well that after dinner he took me into his confidence. We were lying under a tree, and I had given him the first cigar he had ever saw, when he suddenly said:

"Would you—you—run away?"

"What! From getting married?"

"Yes."

"No, sir-e-e! You are a lucky man to get such a girl as Sue."

"But folks'll laff."

"Let 'em laugh."

"And wink and twitter and make fun."

"Pooh! What of it?"

"It's just orful, but mabbe I kin do it. I've killed b'ars and rattlers and wildcats, and I've had fights and rows, but this skeers me."

I got him braced up after an hour's talk, and then we took a cut through the woods to see the new cabin which had been erected for the bridal couple. It was a humble structure made of poles, with no door to the doorway and no sash in the window. The grown was beaten down hard for a floor, there was a rude fireplace at one end, and a bedstead had been made of poles laid in crotches. Davy's mother had given him a bear skin, a kettle, a skillet, and a jug, and these were placed in a corner. Susan's parents had given her a pan, a kettle, three tin plates, two spoons, two knives and forks, and a bottle of vinegar, and these were placed in another corner. That was the whole outfit.

The mountaineers were my friends. They had gone to every trouble to oblige me, and here was an opportunity to requite their kindness. There was a genuine country store about a mile away, and I got rid of Davy and went down there. I had a little talk with the storekeeper and wrote out a list of things and tendered the pay, and his voice actually trembled as he said.

"Twelve hull dollars! Stranger, ye can't mean it?"

"Oh, but I do."

"And all a free gift to Dave and Sue?"

"Yes."

"Wall, it beats sarpents? 'Deed, it beats b'ars and wildcats! Put it there, stranger! I've seed strange things in my time, but this clutters me!"

That evening Andrews and his wife had to go over to sit up with a sick neighbor, leaving me alone with the lovers. After the "sputter" had been lighted Sue said to me:

"You won't keer, will you?"

"About what?"

"And pop said you wouldn't laff nor titter."

"What at?"

"Dave and me is going to court."

"Go right ahead, my dear girl. I am very near-sighted and hard of hearing, and you needn't be afraid of me."

They sat down on the door sill, and after a minute Dave queried:

"Hain't nobody lookin', be there?"

"Guess not."

"Then I'm goin' to."

"No you hain't."

"But I must, 'cause I orter."

He put his arm around her waist, and there was another long silence. Then he said:

"Kin I squeeze yer hand?"

"Noap."

"But I orter."

"Well, mebbe."

"And you hain't kissed me for an hour."

"David!"

"But I orter to be kissed. And you orter be kissed."

"I can't consider."

"But you orter. Nobody'll see."

"Well, mebbe, you know best."

"Course I know best. Haven't I killed b'ars and wildcats?"

"Sartin, fur I seed their hides."

"Don't sot way off there, Susan. Sot clusser."

"Noap."

"But you orter. Yer pop would say yer orter. Hain't we most married?"

"Well, mebbe I orter."

"We's gwine to be crackingly happy."

"Yes."

"Never git mad."

"Noap."

I went to bed and left them there, and I shouldn't wonder if they put in most of the night at it. At about ten o'clock next morning the people began to drop in, and at 11 the marriage took place. The groom had a weak spell, but I braced him up, and when the fatal noose was adjusted and the trap swung his conduct was fair to medium. After dinner we formed in procession and escorted them to their new home. Almost everybody had come laden with a present of some sort. In the center of the cabin was my surprise, and no crowd of people were ever so dumbfounded. Mrs. Andrews drew the articles out and it took every one's breath away as she shouted:

"Real tea and coffee and saleratus! And here's cotton cloth and pins and thread! And here's sugar and molasses and soap! And here's crockery—real crockery—and knives and forks and spoon—"

But all the women were crying by that time and all the men were trembling with excitement. They laid it on to me and I had to own up, and then Andrews called:

"Yer—Dave, Sue—git right down here on yer knees, and sw'ar to the stranger that you'll pot-luck with him and his'n as long as grass grows and water runs and may the Lord never desert him!"

And who could ask for a greater reward? —Detroit Free Press.

SEVEN POSITIVE NEGATIVES.

Never go to bed with cold or damp feet.

Never lean with the back upon anything that is cold.

Never begin a journey until the breakfast has been eaten.

Never take warm drinks and then immediately go out into the cold.

Never ride in an open carriage or near the window of a car for a moment after exercise; it is dangerous to health or even life.

Never omit regular bathing, for unless the skin is in regular condition, the cold will close the pores and favor congestion or other diseases.

Never stand still in cold weather, especially after having taken a slight degree of exercise.

EXERCISE FOR GIRLS.—Why should a healthy, growing girl be expected to sit still any more than her romping brother, about whom no concern is manifested, provided he remains in the house only long enough to eat and sleep? What matter is it if outdoor sports are hard upon dresses and boots? It takes less time and anxiety to mend torn clothes than to watch by beds of sickness, and it costs less to pay the shoemaker than the doctor. The daughters of this generation are to be the mothers of the next, and they need outdoor exercise and indoor sports to make them healthy in body, gentle in disposition and free from all those nervous affections that are the bane of every woman whose days of girlhood were passed in making patchwork and doing the thousand and one other foolish things commonly denominated "girl's work."—Nashua Telegraph.

"What b-e-a-u-tiful peaches," said an old lady, as she stopped at a stall in the market and admired a basket of early peaches. They were covered with pink gauze and looked very tempting. The old lady bought the peaches and took them home. The next day she appeared at the stall and showed the stall-keeper a small piece of pink net. "Do you keep that kind of veiling for sale?" she asked. The stall-keeper told her that he did not. "Well," she said, "when I got them peaches home they were small and sour and green, and I thought if I could get some of that stuff that made them look so pretty and plump in the basket, I'd wear it myself. If it would improve me as much as it did the peaches folks would think I'd found the Elijah of life."

A DUDE BRIDEGROOM.

"How do I look, Dicky?"

Dicky is the "best man" and a brother dude. He replies with great fervor:

"Oh, splendid, deah boy, splendid."

"Wealey, Dicky?"

"'Pon honnah, old fellow."

"My necktie all right, Dicky?"

"Yes, yes—everything's all right."

"Weally, Dicky?"

"'Pon honnah, dear boy."

"Me coat sets well in the back, Dicky?"

"Couldn't be bettah."

"Weally, Dicky?"

"Yes, weally."

"Oh, Dicky?"

"Well, deah boy?"

"Isn't there a winkle, a great horrid winkle in my right glove?"

"No—'pon honnah."

"Oh, I'm so glad, for—O Dicky!"

"Well, me boy?"

"Would you mind taking the brush and smoothing me hair down a little on the left side?"

"With pleasure, old fel."

"Ah, thanks."

"How do you feel, me boy?"

"A twifle nervous, Dicky,"

"Ah, brace up, brace up, me boy."

"What time is it, Dicky?"

"A quarter to 8."

"Ah! Almost time for the ceremony. Hanged if I don't wish it was all over with. You sure I look all right, Dicky?"

"Splendid, old fel."

Ah, thanks awfully, deah boy, I'm a twifle pale, eh, Dicky?"

"A mere twifle."

"Ah, thanks. Would you mind fanning me a little, Dicky?"

"With pleasure, me boy."

Oh, Dicky, what if I should faint?"

"There, there, me boy; don't get nervous."

"Hanged if I can help it. Ah, it is time to meet Helen, and I look all right. I—my necktie—I—my trousers—for— I—I— my hair, Dicky, my hair, I—I—Oh, Dicky, I'm so nervous!"—Detroit Free Press.

HINTS TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

Use lemon juce and salt to remove iron rust.

A solution of pearlash in water, thrown upon a fire, will extinguish it immediately.

When a hinge creaks put a little graphite or soft lead pencil on the place of friction.

Apple sauce is much improved by the addition of a tablespoonful of butter, and requires less sugar.

To preserve the elasticity of India rubber, wash it five or six times a year with slightly alkaline water.

Corks may be made air and water tight by keeping them for five minutes under melted paraffine; they must be kept down with a wire screen.

The best way when hot grease has been spilled on a floor is to dash cold water over it, so as to harden it quickly and prevent it striking into the boards.

For cleansing brass use a thin paste of plate powder, two tablepoonfuls of vinegar, four tablepoonfuls of alcohol. Rub with a piece of flannel; polish with chamois.

A good disinfectant is made by disolving half a dram of nitrate of lead in a pint of boiling water, then disolve two drams of common salt in eight or ten quarts of water.

A good handful of rock salt added to the bath is the next best thing after an "ocean dip," and a gargle of a weak solution is a good and ever-ready remedy for a sore throat.

Cracks in stoves and stovepipes are readily closed by a paste made of ashes and salt with water. Iron turnings or filings, sal ammoniac and water, make a harder and more durable cement.

To take rust out of steel rub the steel with sweet oil; in a day or two rub with finely powdered unslaacked lime until the rust all disappears, then oil again, roll in woolen and put in a dry place, especially if it be table cutlery.

MRS. SMITH'S ILL LUCK.

Women of the metropolis are in some instances very curious creatures, indeed. The horse cars occasionally furnish striking illustrations of this fact. A middle-aged girl and a girl of girlish age were seated in a crowded horse car, last night, chatting in so loud a tone that at least one-half of the passengers could hear them.

"Wasn't that really too bad about poor Mrs. Smith?" said one of them.

"Why, I haven't heard of it. Please tell me," said the other.

"Oh, haven't you heard of it. Why, dear me, I supposed everybody knew it. You know the great trouble she had in getting a divorce from her husband," said the one.

"Oh, yes, but she got it, didn't she?" asked the other.

"Oh, yes, but she had to pay $400 for it."

"But she ought to be satisfied with that, hadn't she?"

"Well, hardly; her husband, just to show how mean he could be if he wanted to, died the week after she paid $400, and she had all her expense and trouble for nothing.

HE GOT THE WORST OF IT.—In the published recollections of Lyman Beecher, it is told that while walking home one night with a big book under his arm, a skunk suddenly crossed his path. He threw the book at it, and when he reached home they had to fumigate him and bury all his clothes. A few weeks after the catastrophe one of his sons came rushing into his father's presence with a pamphlet in his hand, saying excitedly: "Look here, father, what this scalawag has written about you. You must answer him." "Pooh! pooh!" said the old doctor. "I'll have nothing to do with him. I issued a whole quarto volume against a skunk lately, and I got the worst of it."

Sam Jones says: "The meanest father in the world is he who sends his son to college to get rid of him, when he can't manage him himself. I had rather have my boy in heaven if he did not know B from a bull's foot than have him reading Greek in hell.

This notice is said to have been fixed upon a church door in Hertfordshire, and read in the church: "This is to give notice that no person is to be buried in this churchyard but those living in the parish, and those who wish to be buried are desired to apply to me. Ephriam Grubb, parish clerk."

THE

D. H. BRIGHAM CO.

TO ALL

CLOSE BUYERS

We begin this week a sale of Fall and Winter Garments which were purchased of the old firm last March. You will remember we bought the stock too late in the season to be of interest to buyers of Heavy Goods, and we at once opened a new Spring and Summer stock. Now want of space really compels us to make prices on these goods in order that we may close them out at once. We have made some very large reductions from the D. H. B. & Co. prices. The assortment contains an immense variety of

FINE GOODS.

There is not a poor-style garment in the entire stock. Neither are there any "shop-worn" goods. Many of them were bought late last fall and winter and as desirable as any could wish. This sale will not in any way interfere with the sale of our

NEW GOODS

of which we have an elegant stock.

The Sale Which Commences At Once

Of these seasonable garments will be appreciated because there are a great many lots which are full lines, regular sizes; just as fine as the new goods of which we have an immense stock. Particularly desirable are the suits for young men which to-day show such a from our last winter's prices. Buying them as we did late last spring we are able to offer fine, choice and seasonable garments, overcoats included, at such marvelously low prices You can have alterations made if needed.

GREAT MARK DOWN

We Can Furnish Horse Clothing

BY THE BALE OR AT RETAIL.

Our stock is coming in daily, and the assortment is very large and fine. Among the Blankets are the celebrated "North Star" goods, of which we are sole agents. Among the cheaper goods are to be found a great variety of the celebrated 5-A Blankets, which are the best and most favorably known in the country. These come direct from the manufacturers themselves, and you can buy them of us with one "profit off" at least.

LAP ROBES

Made of wool or plush are needed now; these cold nights and mornings make them necessary for everybody who drives. We have really an elegant variety both of foreign and domestic manufacture. Will you, if interested, look through this department.

Let It Pass.

Be not swift to take offence;
Let it pass!
Anger is a foe to sense;
Let it pass!
Brood not darkly o'er a wrong
Which will disappear ere long;
Rather sing this cheery song—
Let it pass!
Let it pass!

Strife corrodes the purest mind;
Let it pass!
As the unregarded wind
Let it pass!
Any vulgar sounds that live
May condemn without reprieve;
'Tis noble to forgive.
Let it pass!
Let it pass!

Echo not an angry word;
Let it pass!
Think how often you have erred;
Let it pass!
Since our joys must pass away
Like the dewdrops on the spray,
Wherefore should our sorrows stay?
Let it pass!
Let it pass!

If for good you've taken ill,
Let it pass!
Oh! be kind and gentle still;
Let it pass!
Time at last makes all things straight;
Let us not resent, but wait,
And our triumph shall be great;
Let it pass!

Bid your anger to depart,
Let it pass!
Lay these homely words at heart,
"Let it pass!"
Follow not the giddy throng:
Better to be wronged than wrong;
Therefore sing this cheery song—
Let it pass!
Let it pass!

—All the Year Round.

HICKSON'S CLAIM.

Big Joe Dunlap had, for years, borne a most unsavory reputation, and no one was surprised when his meanness culminated in the "jumping" of Riley Hickson's "claim." What made the matter all the more discreditable to Dunlap was the fact that he was already the possessor of as fine a "claim" as there was in the county.

At Banner's Jaybird Grocery the affair was being discussed by a number of settlers, lounging on boxes, inverted kegs and Banner's hacked counter.

"Tell you what's a fact," Abe Slater said, as he puffed at a wire-bound cob pipe. "Time an' agin, I've seed one man do dirt to another, but this yere is the durnedest, low-down dirt I ever seed put on a man! Rile Hickson is triflin', I'll admit—as triflin', I reckon, as ary man twixt this an' the line, but that haint no excuse for usin' him that-a-way."

"That's what hit haint," agreed Banner, the grocer.

"Jest 'cause he kin," Abe went on. "Joe takes advantage uv Rile an' throws him out 'o his house an' home. An' winter comin' on, too. I'm afeard Rile's woman an' the leetle army uv children 'll plumb starve. If that New York feller hadn't died an' left his dug-out, they'd a-be'n homeless, shore. An' they haint certain uv the dug-out for mor'n a week. New York feller's kin-folks is liable to turn up 'most any day, an' oust 'em."

"That's what they air," interjected Banner.

"But what kin we do about hit?" continued Abe. "No use to argy with Joe. Might jist as easy argy a badger out 'o his hole as to try to argy Joe out o' that claim. Law's on his side, too. We might, an' ort to go and throw him out bodily, law or no law, but hit wouldn't be a healthy thing to try. Joe'd sooner fight than eat, an' he'd be liable to shoot two or three uv us while we was figgerin' how to take him."

"That's what he'd do," Banner assented.

"Yer mighty right! But hit's low-down dirt an' nothin' but hit!"

"Tell you what I'll do," spoke Banner, the grocer. "Fust time Joe Dunlap comes yere he'll have to pay for what he gits or do without. Thar's no 'tick 'yere for him!"

"Bully for you!" cried Abe Slater. "Blamed if we don't stan' by you; won't we, boys?"

The "boys" signified their willingness to "stand by" Banner.

"Yes, an' if he cuts up rusty, he'll git some rough handlin'," went on Abe. "Blamed if I wouldn't like to see him now, an' tell him what I——"

There came a step on the floor of the porch, and big Joe Dunlap strode in. Without as much as a glance at the loungers, he stepped to the counter and ordered ten pounds of "side meat" and half a dollar's worth of coffee. When these were wrapped up, he packed them up, and with a growl of "charge hit," strode out of the Jaybird grocery.

Not one of the group made any remark about Banner's non-refusal of credit to Dunlap. Each felt that, under the same circumstances, he would have done likewise, and so held his peace. Then the interrupted discussion was resumed.

"Havin' be'n a soldier three years," Abe said, "Rile only had a couple uv years to stay on the claim before hit would a-be'n hisn'. Two years will be up next Satiday week. But what did Rile do but go, like a plumb fool, with his family over into the next county to visit some uv his woman's kin-folks, an' leave the claim to run hitself. Before sundown Joe Dunlap had hit jumped."

"That's what he had," interjected Banner.

"Wal, back come Rile an' his family, happy as 'possoms in a pawpaw patch, an' got yere to find themselves without a home."

And so the discussion went on, and Joe Dunlap's meanness was thoroughly ventilated.

Meanwhile Big Joe rode leisurely along. The "side meat" and coffee were in a grain sack thrown across the "horn" of his saddle.

"The gang at the Jaybird was jowerin' 'bout me as I come in," he muttered. "Yit none uv 'em had the sand to say a word to my face. Wal, let 'em rant; I'm able for all uv 'em!"

The rock-weeds on the stony slope of a branch "hissed" and rattled as the horse brushed through them. A gopher flashed out of sight in his hole beneath a lime-stone slat. A cotton-tail rabbit sprang up and dashed away toward the fringe of timber that marked the creek, far off to the south-east. Presently a buzzard that, for hours, had wheeled and whirled high above the mound, sailed away toward the south-east.

But, big Joe, with his eyes fixed meditatively upon the horse's mane, did not notice any of these signs of an approaching storm.

In the northwest a cloud, low and dark and no larger than the cover of an immigrant wagon, appeared. A moment later it was as long as the mound, and seemingly as high. It rose with race-horse speed, but as soundless as a spectre. It was black above and white below, and seemed devouring, blotting out the landscape as it came. The icy wind made Joe shiver, warmly clad as he was.

Then, of a sudden, the sun seemed blotted out, and horse and rider were enveloped in a hissing, blinding rush of snow. The light of day was shut out almost as effectually as if the sun had been extinguished, and in the snow and sleet that swirled about them Joe could scarcely see beyond the horse's head. The cold seemed freezing his very blood and turning his whole body to ice. With numbed fingers he untied the sack and let the meat and coffee fall to the ground. The sack he wrapped about his head and face as securely as possible.

The snow was already six inches deep. Soon it was a foot in depth, and impeded the horse's progress somewhat. Presently it deepened until his gait was a floundering gallop. Then he could only bound staggeringly along, with the snow almost up to his body.

As he sprang unsteadily down the slope of a "branch," he stopped with a suddendess that almost unseated his half-frozen rider. Something seemed moving just ahead. With a worldless cry it fell and the snow swirled over it.

Big Joe swung himself from the saddle and stirred the snow-covered object with his foot. It uttered a moan, and, as Joe raised it up, he saw that it was a child—a girl of perhaps a dozen years.

"Wal, I'll be durned!" he muttered, as he took her in his arms. The child seemed hardly to know that rescue was at hand, and only moaned.

With the bridle over his arm, and the half-frozen girl held close to his breast, Big Joe strode sturdily forward in the waist-deep snow. Often he stumbled, but he staggered strongly forward in spite of the snow and the deathly cold. The blizzard hissed about him, as if angry at being robbed of its prey.

There was a strange ringing in his ears, and Joe was half delirious with the terrible, killing cold.

"Roar an' sizz all ye please!" he shouted defiantly. "Hit takes more than one blizzard to down Big Joe Dunlap!"

The storm whirled his words away, and seemed to shriek in derision. Joe did not feel so cold now. There was a surging fire in his blood, and his heart seemed beating with twice its accustomed rapidity. Often he thought he could see looming up, just before him, some dark mass—a house or tree—but it always proved but a delusion of the blizzard.

Something struck him full in the breast, and his hand came in contact with the sharp points of a barbed wire. It meant that shelter was not far distant, and he staggered along the fence. He reached a point where it was almost blown down, and swayed at every blast. The posts seemed to be upheld by the tension of the wire.

"I know whar I am now," Joe muttered. "Nobody but a fool or a triflin' feller like Rile Hickson would a-tried to put up any but a juck fence on a rocky strip!"

Soon they reached and entered a bar-way. Hurrying along a snow-hidden road, marked by the dim ghosts of the sod-corn stalks on either side, they soon reached the house that shiftless Riley Hickson's family had called home, till Joe Dunlap had deprived them of it by "jumping" the claim. They were soon safe within the house, and as Joe laid the child on the bed in the one room, the horse bent his head and blew his hot breath in her face.

Soon a fire was roaring in the cracked stove, and fast beating back the cold. The girl soon recovered consciousness, and, presently, there was a group of three around the stove.

The child spread her small, freckled hands to the grateful heat. The pony seemed the picture of content as he stood as close to the stove as he could well be without burning. Every now and then he uttered a long-drawn sigh of satisfaction. Presently Joe questioned the girl.

"How come you out in the blizzard, leetle one?"

"Maw's ager was worse an' I'd started to Banner's to git quinine for hit."

"W'y n't yer Paw go, or was he sick too?"

The child moved uneasily, as if she could find no ready excuse for her father's negligence.

"He—w'y—didn't feel right peart," she said presently. "The misery in his bones was right bad."

A suspicion dawned upon Joe's mind.

"Who's your Paw?" he asked.

"Riley Hickson."

"That triflin' houn'! No wonder he didn't go when he could git anybody to do hit for him!"

The child's hay-colored hair seemed to bristle with wrath, and her freckled face flushed with resentment.

"Don't you call my Paw triflin', blame you!" she snapped. "He haint triflin', so he haint, an' I won't stay to hear him called so! The blizzard's lettin' up an' I'm a-goin' to leave you!"

"Don't be harsh, leetle one," he said. "I didn't mean your Paw. I was thinkin' uv a feller back in Injianny."

Mollified the child resumed her seat.

"I'll tell you what you air," she said defiantly. "You're jest as mean as you can be; that's what you air! Call Paw triflin' when you know he's sick! The claim he'd worked so hard to git was all he had in the world, an' yer come an' jumped hit. I jest hope it'll open an' swaller you plumb out of sight, so I do?"

"Little tough on me; haint you, sis?" Joe asked.

"No, I haint? You deserve every last bit uv hit! Jest you wait! Soon as us children git big enough, we're a-goin to ketch you out an' jump yer claim. If you dast to say a word, we'll dog you plumb out uv the county. A claim-jumper like you is wors'n a robber, an' they put robbers in jail."

"But the law was on my side," said Joe.

"Blame the law!" the child burst out.

Evidently the little Border lass stood not one whit in fear of the big man. The more vehement she became, the more anxious to conciliate her was Joe.

Finally, after they had gotten on better terms with each other, the child told Joe of the life at the dug-out, of the scanty meals, of the sickness and despair of the mother, the desponding apathy of the father, and the hunger of the little squad of white-headed children. Then, as the girl ate hungrily of the meat that Big Joe had prepared, and the horse contentedly munched the corn bread given him on a tin plate, Joe muttered more than once to himself:

"A blame mean trick! A dad-blamed mean trick!"

Suddenly he turned to the child, saying:

"Looky yere! 'Spose I sell this claim to you!"

The child stared at him in silence.

"Hit don't suit me," Joe said, apologetically. "Whoever built this shanty, momoxed hit. The well haint much force, an' the land's half hard-pan."

Truth did not enter largely into these statements. The well was an exceptionally good one, and the land surprisingly fertile.

The coming of the blizzard prolonged the discussion at Banner's Jaybird Grocery. The horses were comfortably housed in Banner's large barn, and, for want of a better subject, the men about the stove in the grocery continued to ventilate Big Joe Dunlap's depravity.

They slept on blankets about the stove that night, and breakfasted next morning upon such supplies as the grocery offered.

"Tell you what's a fact," said Abe Slater, "'Twould s'prise me a bit if Rile an' all his family froze to death last night."

Several hours later a little squad of men halted at the fence that surrounded the claim that Joe Dunlap had "jumped" from Riley Hickson. The snow was almost level with the top wire, and stretched away like an unspotted white counterpane, almost as far as the eye could reach.

Several sets of tracks led toward the house, but they escaped the notice of the men who were tying their horses to the fence.

"At home, shore," said Abe Slater. "Smoke's comin' out uv the flue."

Dunlap's pony stuck his head out of a small window hole in the snow-covered stable and neighed loudly.

"Joe may cut up rusty, but we're able for him, I reckon," said Abe.

"You bet we're able for him! Let him cut!" growled another.

There were guns in their hands as they strode toward the house.

"Come!" called a hearty voice in response to a knock.

Abe opened the door, and the little squad filed in.

"Take cheers, gentleman. Take cheers as long as they hold out!" saluted Joe. "Karn't git up to tend to you proper, you see."

They saw. The big man held in his lap a small, white-headed child that slept as sweetly as if in its mother's arms. The mother in question lay on the one bed that the house afforded. It needed but a glance at the mound of quilts wrapped about and over her to tell her ailment to the most casual observer in the group.

"Ager!" Abe Slater said.

In the corner sat Riley Hickson holding a child, one size smaller than the one in Big Joe's arms. He ceased a soothing croon long enough to salute the new-comers with a drawling, "Howdy!"

Flying in and out among the children, in her rapid way from the stove to the table, was the freckled-faced girl whom Joe had found in the blizzard.

The intruders seemed thoroughly uncomfortable. Presently, in sheer desperation, Abe spoke:

"We yeared thar was timber wolves about, an' 'lowed we'd come down to see if they was pesterin' you, Joe."

"Much obleeged," answered Joe.

"That is—I mean—we lowed you was alone yere, an'—an'——"

"Wal, I haint. Got lots of company, you see. Rather, I'm visitin' yere myself. This is Rile Hickson's claim."

Riley summoned up sufficient energy to smile at the astonishment depicted upon the faces of the intruders. Abe Slater fairly gasped.

"W'y, I 'lowed——"

"'Lowed I jumped this claim?" interrupted Joe. "So I did, but I sold hit back to Rile, or, rather, his leetle gal, thar."

The man nearest the door rose up awkwardly, and the rest eagerly followed his example.

"Wa'l," Abe Slater said, "reckon we'd better be moseyin'. Hafto go down to Hi Ashburn's place an' see if the wolves has pestered him."

The girl followed them out of the door.

"Yes, he sold me the claim," she said. "Ast me what I'd give, an' w'en I told him two bits was all the money I had in the world, he said that was enough. Said two bits was mor'n the place was worth, anyhow. So we traded."

As she re-entered the house, she heard Abe ejaculate:

"Wa'l, I'm beat!"

"Me, too," some one chorused.

Then the little squad strode to their horses, mounted and rode away with heads bent as if thinking deeply.

Joe Dunlap laughed softly as he smoothed the white hair of the child in his lap.

"Reckon I know what that gang wanted," he said. "Hadn't be'n for our trade, leetle gal, I'd a-be'n roughly handled. Yere's yer pay for protectin' me." And he tossed her the two-bit piece for which he had previously exchanged the claim.—Drake's Magazine.

BALKY HORSES.

The following different ways of treating a balky horse are recommended: First. Pat the horse on the neck, examine him carefully, first on one side and then the other; if you can get him a handful of grass give it to him. Then jump into the wagon and give the word go and he will generally obey. Second. Taking the horse out of the shafts and turning him around in a circle until he's giddy will generally start him. Third. Another way to cure a balky horse is to place your hand over his nose and shut off his wind until he wants to go. Fourth. Then, again, take a couple of turns of stout twine around the fore legs just below the knee, tight enough for the horse to feel it; tie in a bow knot; at the first click he will probably go dancing off. After going a short distance you can get out and remove the string, to prevent injury to the tendrons. Fifth.—Again, you can try the following: Take the tail of the horse between the hind legs and tie it by a cord to the saddle girth. Sixth.—The last remedy I know is the following: Tie a string around the horse's ear, close to the head, this will divert his attention and start him.—National Stockman.

HOW'S THIS FOR A LIE?

Mr. Thomas had a large farm on the Missouri bottoms near Sioux City. It was all fenced with barbed wire, there being two miles of such fence on the place. He happened in Sioux City just about the time that the gorge up the river had dammed the water to such a prodigious hight. Forseeing that when the gorge broke it would be likely to raise the water to such an extent as to flood his farm, he rode hastily home and made preparations accordingly. His stock and all that was movable was transferred to higher ground. Then he and his hired men proceded to impale small chunks of meat on every barb of that wire fence. It was a big job, but it was finished just as the river began to cover the lower pasture lot. For 26 hours the water stood five feet above the top of the highest post fence, and when it receded the most remarkable sight was revealed. From every barb, except three, of the two miles of fencing, hung a fish. There were pickeral, bass, pike, suckers and every other imaginable variety. A simple calculation will show precisely the size of the haul. It was a five wire fence, each wire having 36 barbs to the rod, a total of 115,200 barbs to the two miles of fencing. There were three barbs that had caught nothing, so there were only 115,197 fish. Perhaps the most remarkable part of the story is to come: From that day to this in all parts of the Missouri river, there have been caught just three fish, the exact number that didn't get caught on our friend's barbed wire fence.—Iowa Falls Register.

HOW TO STAMP A LETTER.—"Out of the millions of persons who stamp letters daily, but few know the way to do the "licking," remarked Mr. Alf Oldham, the stamp purveyor at the postoffice.

"Which is the right way, Alf?" queried a listener.

"Why, the envelope ought to be licked, not the stamp. If you lick the envelope and apply the stamp, it will stick, sure. If you lick the stamp you are liable to carry all the mucilage on your tongue, or so much of it that the stamp will fall off. Many a letter has reached the Dead-Letter office because the sender licked the stamp instead of the envelope."—St. Louis Courier-Journal.

The mathematical fiend has been at work upon the human heart. His calculation is a curious one and gives the work of the heart in miles and beats. It is based upon the presumption that the pulsations of the cardiac organ are sixty-nine a minute, and the assumption that the force of each pulsation is nine feet. Computed thus according to his figures, the mileage of the blood through the body might be taken as 207 yards per minute, seven miles per hour, 168 miles per day, 61,320 miles per year, 4,292,400 in a lifetime of three-score and ten. The number of beats of the heart in the same long life would reach the grand total of 2,538,848,000.

A poorly clad little girl came into the store of one of our stationers recently. She wished to buy some writing paper, and finally was shown some for five cents a quire. "If you please, I'll take the other half," was the quick response.—Augusta (Me.) Journal.

Some Day.

Some day! Some day! the weary cry
Of souls too sadly worn to live,
Save in the hope that time may give
Some richer blessings, by and by;
And mournful is that hopeful sigh—
Some day.

Some day! Some day! The heart once light
Has learned too well that Syren song;
Let live and thrive the right and wrong—
The good upheld the wrong set right,
The just see; 'twill end—the fight—
Some day.

Some day! Some day! 'Twill come, ah me,
When written on life's title page
Is Finis! The golden age
Of Dreams is something to be,
But voicings o'er an unknown sea—
Some day.

PAT AND THE BUSTLE.

Some Norwich boys found a woman's bustle last week, and being inspired by some lower power put it in a coal carrier's basket in place of the canvas shoulder pad he had been accustomed to use. When the coal carrier went out the next morning with his first load of coal his eye fell upon the strange thing for which he had no name.

"Phat is this, Moike?" he said to the driver, and although both of them were family men, they were sorely puzzled. Mike replied:

"Sure, I dunno, I never seed the likes of it before."

Not finding his shoulder protector, the coal carrier saw in it a novel substitute for it, and he said:

"Begorra, Moike, I have it! This is a patent shoulder piece the boss has got me!" and he put the old bustle on his shoulder, and finding that it was a fair fit, tied the strings around his neck. He worked with the new shoulder protector all day, to the amusement of all who recognized the bustle in such high use. Pat noticed the new protector made him a source of curiosity, but he did not learn the truth until he showed it to the boss in the evening when, thanking him for the gift, he said:

"The inventor of this meant well, but he never carried coal. These wire cords are that narrer that they cut like a knife; but, begorra, the thort is a good one, and I can make one ov it that'll wurruk."

His employer informed him that he had been subjected to a practical joke; that his shoulder protector was a bustle, that had seen its day and been laid away.

Mike, the driver, smiled and said: "It's never seen a greater day than this. Twenty tons of coal have been on it. I'll bet a better man never wore one than Pat Doegon."—Norwich Bulletin.

AS TO IRONING.

More clean clothes are needed now than in cold weather, but after towels and plain underclothing are well washed, thoroughly rinsed and then dried upon the clean grass, how they are improved by dampening, ironing and hanging about the kitchen stove to absorb the odor of boiling and frying?

Even sheets that are to be used at once will do very well if spread smoothly to dry and folded carefully when taken up. The fresh, sweet smell of clothing dried in this way is an inducement for even the most particular mothers to use a great many pieces for children that have been untouched by a hot iron. So many notable housekeepers have said to us hesitatingly, as if it were almost a sin, that they made it a rule to put away many coarse pieces unironed from the weekly washing that we begin to think it a way that most women fall into after they have learned to dispose of their strength to the best advantage. It is the young housekeeper who has the greatest burdens and who fears that other folks will say, who needs urging to little wholesome neglects.

This ironing subject has been a point of discussion in several household papers for months at a time, and may be disposed of by simply saying—iron every rag even, if you have the inclination, time and strength, and by doing so will not neglect some greater object than a towel, but if you see fit to wear your clothes only sun-ironed, take satisfaction in the knowledge that thousands of others do so and are accounted sensible in knowing when they have done enough.—New England Farmer.

A BEAUTY.—The fellow had seen everything and got a chip off everything and had some memento of everything. He dropped into a little knot of artists, who were discussing Bohemian life in many places. As the traveler came in one of them was saying:

"Ah, that is the place where they make the welkin ring."

"What place are you talking about?" asked the traveler.

"We were talking of Bohemia."

"Oh, yes; Bohemia, I know. I've been there. I've got one of them."

"One of what?"

"One of them welkin rings—an' it's a beauty."—San Francisco Chronicle.

A man white as a sheet and scarely able to stand, met a Boston patrolman a few nights ago with the remark: "I'm stabbed and I do not know as I shall live to tell you about it." The officer caught the assailant and the man was carefully taken to the station, apparently growing weaker every minute. A sympathizing officer asked where the wound was and the spot was pointed out. But pity was soon turned to mirth when the clothes were removed and there was not even a scratch to show the cause of the man's pain. He had been struck, it seems, and his imagination was the cause of his suffering. The assailant was locked up for drunkenness.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 5, 1888.

MR. BLAINE addressed an immense Republican rally at New York last Saturday night, and is now speaking in the West.

PROSPERITY attends upon our Springfield neighbors to such an extent that both the Republican and the Union have found it necessary to enlarge their borders by the addition of a column to each page. May their shadow continue to grow.

PITCHER, the defaulting teller of the Union Bank of Providence, R. I., has been sentenced at Montreal to seven years in the penitentiary, for bringing stolen money into Canada. It is pleasant to know that one of the many scamps over the line is to receive at least a portion of the punishment he deserves.

THIS is certainly a cold season for the Democrats,—and for everybody else too, for that matter. The thermometer below freezing in September, and snow squalls the first week in October, are not the sort of autumn weather we really care for just yet, but it is what we might expect from an administration which is using every means to freeze out the Republicans.

THE Republican tariff bill was reported to the Senate Wednesday, and the reduction made by it amounts to about $75,000,000. Of this sum $27,000,000 comes off from sugar, $24,370,000 from tobacco, $6,428,000 from alcohol used in the arts, and $8,100,000 from other articles. Instead of free wool, as in the Mills bill, the duty on wools and some varieties of woolens is increased. It is talked that the bill will be passed next week and sent to the House.

THE New York boodlers will escape further prosecution, as District Attorney Fellows says the courts are so full of business that there is no chance of bringing them to trial. It will be remembered that when Mr. Fellows was up for election President Cleveland took particular pains to write a cordial indorsement of his candidacy. Mr. Cleveland of course was familiar with his reputation, and it is therefore fair to assume that Fellows is a reformer after his own heart.

A DEMOCRATIC journal figures out that "Gen. Harrison's speeches thus far in the campaign have enough material in them, if properly grouped, to make 40 annual messages to congress, 75 thanksgiving proclamations, 17 inaugural addresses, 97 veto messages and 84 miscellaneous speeches to delegations and special audiences of all sorts." What bothers the Democrats most in this connection is the remarkable fact that in all his admirable speeches they cannot find anything to pick up and turn against him. Mr. Cleveland would hardly be so fortunate in such a series of speeches.

CASHIER CHAPIN of the Union National Bank at Fall River, who was also treasurer of the Union Savings Bank, has had to resign, an examination showing that he had made loans and permitted overdrafts, unknown to the directors, to the extent of some $85,000. The matter had been covered up by transfers from one bank to the other as occasion required. He does not appear to have profited personally by the transactions. Albert E. Bosworth, treasurer of the Stafford Mills, who was concerned in the irregular loans, has fled the city.

THE Republicans of the 11th district had a lively convention at Greenfield Wednesday, and it took them until one o'clock the next morning to nominate a candidate for Congress. The informal ballot showed 56 votes for Rodney Wallace of Fitchburg, 34 for Col. Walker of Belchertown, 33 for Judge Conant of Greenfield and 29 for D. W. Bond of Northampton. Then the battle began, and ballot followed ballot without result until the 41st, when the Conant men went over to Wallace, giving him the nomination. The Walker men stood firm to the end. If the Hampshire and Franklin delegates could have agreed on a candidate they might have nominated him easily.

MR. MORTON has published his letter accepting the Republican nomination for vice president, this week, indorsing the party platform and emphasizing the tariff issue, of which he says:

> The American people have now enjoyed the protective system for a longer continuous period than ever before in the history of the national government. The result is that for more than a quarter of a century they have realized a degree of industrial and financial prosperity unprecedented in this country and never equaled in any other. The pressing reason given for once again trying the old experiment of a revenue tariff without protection as a motive or end, is that the present tariff has produced and is producing a surplus in the treasury. But is it not easily within the wisdom of Congress to adjust the national income to the national expenditure without sacrificing, or even imperiling an industrial system which has brought untold advantages to the entire country? Admitting that the present tariff, by lapse of time and the large expansion of trade which it has stimulated, needs revision, is it not wiser and more patriotic to revise it with a careful regard to the interest of protection, than with the purpose of lessening its protective features? In a business life, now extending over 40 years, I have witnessed and compared the effect upon the country of a revenue tariff tending to free trade, with a protective tariff, encouraging home industries; under the former the development of the country has always been arrested, while under the latter it has uniformly been promoted. To the men who can earn their bread by the sweat of their brows the difference between the two systems is that of narrowing chances on the one hand, and expanding opportunities on the other.

ALL pretense of civil service reform appears to have been abandoned by the administration at Washington. The latest exhibition of subserviency to the spoilsman is the following circular to the U. S, arsenals and armories, which was sent out last January, and just leaked out:—

> Sir: While arsenals and the armory are not intended to be converted into political machines, two political parties in the country are recognized. It is therefore ordered that hereafter in employing and discharging employees of any and all grades, other things being equal, and qualifications satisfactory, Democrats will be favored, the object being to divide the force in the different grades gradually between Democrats and Republicans; this rule will apply to women and children, as well as to men, and will be strictly enforced.

The circular is signed by Gen. Benet, chief of ordnance, and was prepared by direction of Secretary Endicott, who has had the reputation of being the one member of the cabinet who was uncompromising in his opposition to the spoilsmen. But he has now come down handsomely, and is the first secretary of war to degrade himself in this fashion. The application of the order to women and children is particularly offensive. Republican partisanship in its palmiest days never went to this extreme. This administration went into office as a reform administration. It seems bent upon going out as a deformed one.

Horace Towne, the proprietor of the livery stable in the rear of the Nassowanno House, who had a team stolen last week Thursday, went to Hartford, Ct., Saturday, accompanied by Deputy Sheriff Healey, to identify a man whom the police of that city had arrested on suspicion. He identified the team and the man, who said his name was Palmer, and that he was engaged in the real-estate business. Sheriff Healey took charge of the prisoner. The stranger hired a team last Wednesday at the same stable and drove out into the country, returning with it at night and paying for the same, remarking that he would like a good team the next morning, as he had some business to transact with a friend at Brookfield. He told Proprietor Haradon of the Nassowanno House that he would leave his satchel there and when he returned that night or the next morning he would pay his bill, but instead he drove to Hartford and fell immediately into the hands of the officers. Palmer was arraigned at the district court Monday morning, and had his case continued to the 7th in default of bail.

At 8 o'clock the guests of Mrs. Wheeler were conveyed to the Weeks House, where dancing was kept up until a late hour, following which an elegant supper was served, with colored waiters in attendance. The dance hall presented an attractive appearance, it being newly decorated with ferns and other handsome foliage by Edwin Barr of Springfield. The gentlemen appeared in full dress, while the costumes worn by the ladies were costly and elegant. The programme consisted of twenty dances, the music for which was furnished by the Springfield Orchestral Club. The hostess did everything in her power to make the occasion a merry one, and well she succeeded. About 40 couples participated.

The Fire Laddies Made a Very Creditable Appearance.

The annual parade and inspection of the Palmer Fire Department occurred Saturday afternoon, and the firemen in their uniforms, with the glistening apparatus, made a remarkably good showing. The procession formed near the engine-house on Park street at 2 o'clock, and marched through the principal streets of the village in the following order:

Detail of Police.
F. O. Munger, drum major.
Bondsville Brass Band.
Chief Engineer and assistants.
Palmer Steamer Co. No. 1.
Hose Carriages.
Palmer H. and L. Co. No. 1.
Fire District, Town officials and others in carriages.

The procession was reviewed by the engineers after the parade, and the steamer was taken to a hydrant at the corner of Central and Pleasant streets, where it was given a satisfactory test in the presence of a large crowd of people who found the cold and penetrating wind the only disagreeable feature of the exhibition. At 7.30 the members of the department assembled at the Masonic banquet hall, where a hot supper was served under the management of Caterer Barnes, at the expense of the steamer company. The town officials, officers of the fire district and others were among the invited guests, while the Bondsville Brass Band was also in attendance and rendered some good music. After the feast occurred speech-making, in which all the guests of the evening and others indulged. Each alluded to the efficiency of the department, saying that it is an organization of which the town might well feel proud, and one which the citizens should encourage and support. General regret was expressed on account of the resignation of Chairman J. N. Lacey of the prudential committee, who is compelled to close his relationship with the fire district, as he is about to begin his labors elsewhere. The fire laddies then repaired to Firemen's hall, where singing and other amusements were highly enjoyed.

Church Corner-Stone Laid.

The corner-stone of Trinity Episcopal church was laid Wednesday afternoon by Rev. C. W. Duffield, pastor of the church, Rev. P. V. Finch, who was expected to perform the ceremony, not being present. The exercises commenced by responsive reading of the 122d Psalm, led by the pastor, after which the choir sang the 276th hymn. The pastor then read a brief history of the parish, which with a Bible and book of prayer, a picture of the church, and all printed matter touching upon its growth and work, the business cards of the architects, contractors and several local firms, coin to the amount of $1.22 bearing the date 1888, the WARE STANDARD, Ware River News and Springfield Republican, was placed in the copper box to go in the corner stone. The ceremony of laying the stone was then performed. The trowel used was a new one presented for the occasion by J. F. Robinson, and it was afterward presented to Philip Feehan, the mason who laid the foundation of the church.

Rev. J. C. Brooks of Springfield made the only address, and spoke very happily of the relation of the church to the factory. He said: "We lay the corner-stone of a new building in your town to-day, that has nothing of the practical about it. In sight of the great mills there is erected this church which stands for something distinctive, and that is the worship of God and the study of His word. The need for such churches was never more imperative than in this age of mercantile activity and vast mechanical improvements. The temptation that is confronting us is the same as that which met Jesus in the wilderness—the temptation to turn stones into bread—to convert everything into that which feeds the lower nature in man. Surely we need the church, which does not antagonize the factory, but helps it by making men more manly through the teaching that man lives not by bread alone, but by words from out the mouth of God. The people of this town are to be congratulated in that another building is going up wherein men and women shall be taught to cultivate their higher selves through feeding upon God's word."

The speaker than alluded with much earnestness to him whose memory this church is to perpetuate, the Rev. John S. Beers, who had a deep attachment for this town, and who in one of the last letters that he wrote said that something must be done to revive our church work in Ware. "And something has been done, and this church is at once an ending and a beginning. It is the ending of the work of Mr. Beers, and gives it a certain completeness; it is also the beginning of spiritual work that has no ending."

Singing by the choir and benediction by Rev. C. W. Duffield closed the exercises.

The corner-stone is a cube, and was laid at the south-east corner of the tower. On one side that is exposed to view is cut a cross, on the other a unique monogram, 1888. The society, although not yet large, has many friends, and it is expected that when the church is completed there will be little or no debt on it.

The G. A. R. Camp-fire.

At an early hour last evening our citizens began to assemble at the Town Hall, the occasion being the camp-fire of J. W. Lawton Post, 85, G. A. R. The last train from Northampton was heavily loaded, bringing about 200 veterans accompanied by Beldin's Band. They were met at the depot by members of J. W. Lawton post and the Ware Cadet Band, and conducted to the hall, which was taxed to its utmost to hold the crowd, many standing during the evening. The hall was finely decorated with flags, and the stage with flowers and plants, while above was the motto in red, white and blue "Fraternity, Charity and Loyalty." To music by Beldin's Band commander F. P. Clark conducted the department commander, Myron P. Walker, and staff, Lieut.-Governor Brackett, Assistant Adj. Gen. A. C. Monroe, Mrs. Perry of Springfield, senior vice president of the Womans' Relief Corps, and other distinguished guests and some of our leading citizens to the stage, which they occupied during the evening. The exercises were commenced by Commander F. T. Clark, who gave all a cordial welcome with the hope that all might become better acquainted with the object and aims of the Grand Army, and introduced Lieut.-Gov. Bracket, who had never attended a camp-fire before, but was glad to be here and glad to say what he might, but could not speak as the soldiers could, who always can draw upon the reminiscences of the days in camp and field that are never wanting in interest. He related several witty reasons why all did not go to the war. "Comrades of the Grand army of the Republic, none of these causes, real or imaginary, kept you from going in the time of the nation's need." If the citizen would emulate the patriotism of the soldier he should enter into the sprit of anything that shall elevate mankind. Every one owes something to his country, the church, his neighbor and his family.

Belden's Band then gave a medley of the old patriotic songs of war times, interspersed with old army bugle calls.

Department Commander M. P. Walker was then introduced and was received with immense applause. He said he was glad to be here, for here in Ware, near the spot where he now stood, in the old hall he received the first inspiration to be a good soldier, for here he was presented by Col. Hopkins with a cup and spoon, and never since has felt a bigger man than he did as a boy at that time. He said: "I stand here to-night representing 20,000 veterans of Massachusetts," and spoke earnestly and eloquently of the aims of the G. A. R., which now numbers nearly 400,000 men. "We ask no sect or politics, but for a man to be a member must have served his country and received an honorable discharge." He urged that there should be a larger membership in the order. Ware sent out 350 soldiers, but her G. A. R. post numbers but 42 to day. He then spoke of the charity of the G. A. R. Massachusetts stands at the head, having spent $42,000, $5000 more than any other state in the union the past year. Did not need to speak of the loyalty of the G. A. R., they had shown this in the field. He thought the government should provide for the soldiers so they never need to ask for charity. He spoke of the good work of the Woman's Relief Corps, and of the review of the Massachusetts Volunteer Militia the day before, seeing in the young men there those who would save the country, while here to-night he saw the men who did save the country.

Comrade Chas B. Yeaton of Chelsea gave a character song which was received with immense applause, and for an encore gave a Dutch recitation, "Jake and the old white mare," a parody on Sheridan's ride.

Asst. Adj. Gen. Monroe said: "We are sometimes accused of being a mutual admiration society. Have we not a right to admire those who received the old flag with a stain udon it, and after four years gave it back with the stain washed out in human blood? They tell us we are soon to be mustered out. No, we are to be re-enlisted in the grand army above."

Col. Joseph Parsons, the fighting Joe of the gallant 10th, spoke of the uprising of the Massachusetts militia of 1861, the first of the Northern states to respond to the call, giving reminiscences of the war and the loyal men of '61. He also spoke of the loyal women, saying a word in favor of the Woman's Relief Corps.

Comrade Yeaton here gave an excellent imitation song, and for an encore gave a Dutch version of "Barbara Fritchie."

Mrs. Perry spoke for the Woman's Relief Corps, and a meeting was appointed for to-day to arrange for such an organization in Ware.

E. H. Baker spoke for the citizens of Ware, giving the soldiers a cordial welcome, saying: "We never can forget what they have done for us."

H. C. Davis spoke of the faithful work done by the army in the field, and how at the close of the war the army had dispersed as if by magic, and the men took up their former vocation, something never before seen in the history of the world.

Comrade Yeaton gave the soldier scene "Mustered Out; or, the Dying Soldier."

A quartette composed of H. B. and W. A. Anderson, P. J. Mulvaney and William F. Wilson, sang several times during the evening.

After the hall exercises the boys in blue repaired to the Unitarian vestry, where the ladies of the G. A. R. had prepared a bountiful banquet.

OVER 25,000 women have registered in Boston for the purpose of voting on school matters. Women all over the state might well imitate their sisters at the Hub. Schools and school committees would be the better for their active interest and oversight.

HENRY W. ELY of Westfield has been nominated for Congress by the Democrats, and Lewis Warner of Northampton for councilor.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, Oct. 3, 1888.

Boston has been filled with great crowds to-day which gathered to see the parade of the entire militia of the state. The day has been cold for the troops, but they were well prepared, and the cool air was more comfortable for marching than would have been the hot sun which we often have in our Indian summer. The troops were formed for marching on the common and on the neighboring parts of the Back Bay, and they were put in motion at one o'clock. The reviewing stand for the governor and other officials was at the Hotel Brunswick, and at that place were gathered a large number of military and civic dignitaries, with their wives and women friends. As a general truth, the troops made a splendid appearance and were a high credit to the state. They looked trim, and as if careful attention had been paid to every detail of dress and equipments. Their marching was in first-rate form while they were passing the reviewing stand, though it must be said of some of them that they were not nearly as careful when they thought that the inspection was not quite as close. But their appearance as a whole was such as the state need not be ashamed of, and they make it sure that we have troops which can be relied upon for service at short notice, troops which are used to drill and are likely to be reliable. I hope none of them will take it amiss that I do not compliment them more, but they have not been tried yet, except upon parade, and it is best to have something good to say for them when they are put at the work they are organized for, which we sincerely hope will never occur.

But the work of the civilian forces for the good of the nation is actively pushed, if that of the military arm is not. At the political camps there is much activity, though justice to the facts requires it to be said that there is much more activity among the Democrats than there is among the Republicans. If this is not agreeable news, the complaint does not lie against him who writes it, but against those who are responsible, if their explanation is not satisfactory. But they have an explanation which may be more than satisfactory to those who are disposed to be critical of party management. Dr. Burden, the chairman of the Republican state committee, says that the commitee is not doing as much as usual this year because they want to send all of the money possible and their speakers into the doubtful states. Speaker Noyes is in the West, but he is expected to return in time to save himself for a reëlection to the House, where he will be elected speaker for another term, and thus be in position to maneuver for the governorship, from the contest for which he was shrewd enough to withdraw himself before he got as far into it as did Gen. Draper. Noyes will make a strong fight, for he will have the support of another House, if he plays his cards as shrewdly as he usually does, and he will probably have the friendship of those who have been so active for him this year. This may be looking a long ways ahead in our state affairs, but it is no longer than the wise man ought to look, and he ought to be thinking, too, of what he will do, if he does not fancy the things which are being laid out for him to indorse. Well, besides Noyes, Gen. John L. Swift is absent in New York state, stumping for Harrison, and Representative Gile of Worcester is also one of the absentees. Gile is expected to be sent to the Senate in place of Senator Marble, and as the district is safely Republican, it is all right for him to be away. Representative Symonds of Salem is another of the lower house who has already a nomination for the Senate, and he will doubtless be elected. This will deprive the House of one of its most conspicuous members, and one who did more to entertain the visitors than any other member.

But to continue my mention of the different headquarters. At the Democratic office there is more animation than at the Republican. Again I am recording but a simple fact, and if it is not agreeable, it is just as well to know of it. They are very active and are getting encouraging reports from different parts of the state. Of course they expect to be beaten on the state ticket, but they have hopes of carrying several congressional districts. They are sure or hopeful of the third, fourth, fifth, seventh, ninth and tenth. Of course they calculate upon the Republican division in some of these districts, and it is to be remembered that when the state was redistricted in 1882 it was the intention of the Republicans to give the Democrats only the fourth district. That was made so strongly Democratic that the Republicans never expected to carry it. This policy was decided upon in order to avoid the large expenditure of money which had before marked some of the congressional campaigns in Boston districts. The Republicans might have made all the districts doubtful and have taken their risk on carrying them all, or losing two or three. So they preferred to put the Democrats largely into one district and thus to avoid the need of putting out so much money and save the reputation of the state from the suspicion of corruption, for both sides had put out a great deal, so that it became a scandal. One consequence of the change has been bad, for it has shown a tendency to elect second-rate men to Congress, though that has not yet happened. But the factional fights of the past prove that there is danger of not getting the best men if a district is hopelessly one-sided. The closer the contest, the more careful each side is to nominate only its best men. This is a general truth which it is well to remember for future redistrictings of the state.

The campaign is so far along that it is evident that the chief issue is to be the tariff until the end. It is possible, of course, that we shall have some foreign issue interjected into the campaign just at the last moment, just as we had the infamous Morey letter in 1880 in the Garfield campaign. But (though some may not agree) this has not been thus far a campaign of tricks, and it is to be hoped that it will continue to be free from anything but legitimate political effort. The demand for tariff literature continues to be brisk, and the people are turning out at the political meetings in order to hear both sides. Of course most of the voters will be guided by their prejudices, for they will take the arguments which are made by the speakers of their party to bolster up their prejudices. But at the same time, it is evident that the number of those who are seeking light is larger than usual. It is a new problem which has been put before the voters, new for this generation, and they will get all the light possible. I happen to get the information from Josiah Quincy on the Democratic side, and from Treasurer Beard on the Republican side, that the meetings of each party are attended by the voters of the other more than usual. This is a hopeful state of affairs, and we shall have the comfort, when the returns come in, of finding out whether the Republican arguments were the most convincing or whether the Democrats are adjudged to have the weight of argument in their favor.

The Prohibitionists are busy, but they are so few compared with the two great parties that they attract but little attention.

Parties visiting the Bay State Fair, Springfield, will find the art rooms of Chas. Hall's china and crockery store to contain a full line of pottery and metal goods equal in interest and display to any exhibit at the fair. It is the largest establishment in New England outside of Boston, and, besides the above goods, includes a large line of wood mantels and fireplace furnishings, in the setting of which he is unexcelled.

I have not used all of one bottle yet. I suffered from catarrh for 12 years, experiencing the nauseating droppings in the throat peculiar to that disease, and nose bled almost daily. I tried various remedies without benefit until last April, when I saw Ely's Cream Balm advertised in the Boston Budget. I procured a bottle, and since the first day's use have had no more bleeding—the soreness is entirely gone.—D. G. DAVIDSON, with the Boston Budget, formerly with the Boston Journal.

Tried and True

Friends are scarce, but if you are suffering with that horrible disease, scrofula, you will find Sulphur Bitters will cure you as it did me, after suffering eight years, and paying out hundreds of dollars to doctors and druggists.—JEANNETTE HANSCOM, Troy, N. Y.

As good. This is the statement of Prof. Smith, Analytical Chemist; I have analyzed all of the popular blood purifiers and medicines now sold. Many of them I have found to be worthless, some dangerous to use. Sulphur Bitters contains nothing poisonous, and I think it is the best blood purifier made.

Advertising a patent medicine in the peculiar way in which the proprietor of Kemp's Balsam, for Coughs and Colds, does is indeed wonderful. He authorizes all druggists to give those who call for it a sample bottle free, that they may try it before purchasing. The large bottles are 50c. and $1.00. We certainly would advise a trial. It may save you from consumption.

Amelie Rives—Dion Boucicault.

Collier's Once a Week is a literary and artistic marvel. Never have so many appeared in the same firmament. Never have so many living authors of highest celebrity gathered together in one number of one journal, while the magnificent illustrations are on a par with the fascinating literature. Amelie Rives (Chanler) contributes a weird, thrilling and enchaining poem, entitled Asmodeus. Dion Boucicault commences an Irish-American serial that is bound to cause a tremendous sensation. The list of contents speaks for itself.

Amelie Rives, poem "Asmodeus." Illustrated by Sterner.

Marion Harland, story "Dodder." Illustrated by Steeple Davis.

Julian Hawthorne, story "Sally Kirk's Easy Chair. Illustrated by Hul Hurst.

Benson J. Lossing, "Pioneers of Painting in America." Portrait.

Bill Nye, story "Crononhotanthologas." Illustrated by Zimmerman.

Dion Boucicault, novel "Hy-bras-Ayl; or, the Nine Lives of Con O'Neil." Illustrated by McIlvain.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox, poem "Couleur de Rose."

Edgar Faucett, "The Pathos of Growing Fat."

R. K. Munkittrick, novellette "Diary of a Giddy Girl." Illustrated by Coultaus.

James Whitcomb Riley, poem "Down Around the River."

Joseph Howard, Jr., "Reminiscenses."

Mary Kyle Dallas, "Woman's World."

Maurice Thompson, poem "America."

Patience Stapleton, story "True to the Heart's Core." Illustrated by Peloze.

Charles Barnerd, "How to Make a Man of a Boy."

Minnie Irving, poem "Heliotrope."

Continuation of serials "A Masked Marriage," and "A Woman's Mistake."

This wondrous number can be had for seven cents, and we would urge our reader to apply to their newsdealers without delay. Collier's Once a Week has taken a lead that from all accounts it means to keep. Such enterprise is a credit to the country, and thorougly American.

The Laughing Girl.

The bobolink laughs in the meadow;
The wild waves laugh on the sea;
They sparkle and glance, they dimple and dance,
And are merry as waves can be.

The green leaves laugh on the trees;
The fields laugh out with their flowers;
In the sunbeam's glance they glow and they dance,
And laugh to their falling showers.

The man laughs up in the moon;
The stars, too, laugh in the sky;
They sparkle and glance, they twinkle and dance,
Then why, then, pray, shouldn't I?

Oh! I laugh at morn and at night,
I laugh through the livelong day;
I laugh and I prance, I skip and I dance,
So happy am I and so gay.

A St. Louis kiss, which they brag on;
It hit the young man on the side of the head,
And knocked him cold off of the wagon.
The coroner said it was hardly worth while
To proceed to empanel a jury,
Since no man could stand being hit by a kiss
The size of the map of Missouri.
